THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER—NEUTRAL IN POLITICS—DEVOTED TO NEWS, LITERATURE, SCIENCE, MORALITY, AGRICULTURE, AND AMUSEMENT.

Vol. XVIII. Philadelphia, November 23, 1839. Whole No. 956.

Written for the Saturday Evening Post.

THE HOUSE WHERE MY MOTHER WAS BORN.

I have stood near the spot, oh its walls I have gazed;
As the sun kissed the dew drops of morn;
And have thought, as the orb on its ancient path blazed,
'Tis the spot where my mother was born.

I have gazed at each mound of green moss on its roof,
By the storms of a century worn;
And have wondered and sighed, as I stood thus aloof,
Were they there, when my mother was born?

Oh sweet thou old roof! hearth which the child lay,
Protecting its couch from the storm;
Quite gone all the time, and free from decay,
And sweet then more comely in form!

Each rain drop of casement, each crumbling cave
Was dear, though my heart could but mourn
That time could not spare thee, nor storm grant reprieve
Thou lov'd spot where my mother was born.

The grass round the mansion, each flutt'ring leaf,
The air a whistling shell from the horn;
Can not gain attract, for your loves are but brief,
Yet sacred all—when my mother was born.

That unconceived window, where flowerets spring,
Which reflects not the bright rays of morn;
Yet the rose, I'm thought sweet, has a parent thing,
But the rose, was it where she was born?

Or that of the hill side, whose broad branches swing,
Kissing earth mild and cool at each sweep;
Was it there, and did birds on its waving boughs sing,
And bid the young infant to sleep?

Was it young at the time, was it quite a young tree?
Behold its expansive arms now!
And my mother, by look of O emotion of thee,
For the more loved branches than thee.

Blessed, blessed be the state, where Jerusalem's King
Saw the light though a lowly tenement;
And next the old time-hallowed mansions I sing,
Neath whose roof my dear mother was born. W. B.

From the Casket and Philadelphian Monthly Magazine.

BREAKING ONE'S HEART.

A CHIT-CHAT AT THE COUNTRY SEAT OF JEREMY SHORT, ESQ.

"Put up the window, Jeremy, and bring in a mechaum for this gentleman, and another for my self. Egad, sir, but is it not hot? I've almost turned Turk since those dog-days began, and do nothing but smoke, and drink sherbet and take snuff. Yourself in a hot—hope you had a fine voyage up the Hudson—is it not a glorious river? —as I heard a German exile say it equalled the Rhine, and wanted—thank God!—its castles. Your health, sir—your health sir—another for the old river, and let it be a bumper!

"Thank you, Jeremy—you are too kind—but is it? this country air delicious—what a fine prospect from the window!—glorious woods there, rich corn fields, every thing flourishing—and as I live, if there aint two sweet little cherubs playing on the lawn—ah! but you're a happy man—you live like a prince!

"Nonsense, don't talk of it, my dear sir,—there's nothing to boast of, except the children—you have 'em I say. But you're married—Egad, sir, I thought not,—you don't look quite happy enough to be so. But as you were saying there are some fine points in the landscape. That rolling hill, the gentle slope, the stream glittering along the valley; that dark, majestic wood; and down there the Highlands like eternal sentinels watching over the Hudson and yonder, just in a line with that shoot, the blue summits of the Catskill rising like thunder clouds in the west. I think God, sir, I love here. But talking of the Catskill reminds me of a story—a love story too, and one proving my theory, that woman's heart will break for love.—But sit down, sir, and we'll take it easy, for while I narrate, you shall listen; and egad, sir, we'll both smoke to fill up the pauses.

Harry Livingston—did you know him?—was the choicest chap I ever saw. He was younger by many years than myself, and as gay and merry a collegian as ever tricked the professors. A wife poetry instead of Greek, and then—the lasses. Egad, he carved all the bodices in suitor lasses and the faculty. Ah! but he was a rare genius. You too he could converse! Such a mad-cap as could never whispered aside a girl's heart to the tune of a young admirer. And do believe he, he was twenty-three he had had more love's wages, and got out of 'em too, cheaply too, than any young sitter of his age I ever knew. He was plump, fair, with a portmanteau of nothing but silk and wit,—and so as he could n't afford to get married, he used to flirt about among the girls, flitting from flower to flower, and staying just long enough to get a spice of your love making, and then off again. I don't say it was exactly right—many a heart has been broken that way,—but at any rate it was exciting.

Well, there was one sweet creature he had known for years, for they had been children together, and when both grew up it came natural for them to fall in love. Everybody thought it would be a match. I remember her when she was just eighteen—and she was worthy of a monarch's affections! Her form was faultless as the Parian's, with just fullness enough to be exquisite—and her face was not just exactly classic—but ah! such an expression!—and then her soft, deep blue eyes, that looked love at every glance. Egad, sir, the blue in the color to do the work—black may be queenly—hazel may come over one at times,—but when the deep, blue eye of some sweet little fairy, looks full into your own, you might as well give up the war at once.

I have said Livingston was something of a male coquette, and though he was certainly attentive to sweet Alice Leslie for a while,—and though they used to ride and boat together, or sit chatting alone when the old folks were out, or take many a long and solitary walk at moonlight,—and though it ever he loved it was then, let somebody else come in the offing, it soon began to visit her less frequently, and finally—the hard-hearted rascal—he nearly ceased altogether. It may be he knew he was too past to marry, and that his pride forbad him to wed one richer than himself—and it may be that he feared if he continued the intimacy, his heart would be lost without avail—but so it was he dropped gradually off, became attentive to other playing, was the gayest gallant in town, and seemed altogether to have forgotten that such a fair creature as Alice Leslie lived, or that he had spent so many happy hours at her side. At last he seldom crossed altogether. It was now summer, and they had not met since Christmas. Of course Alice never allowed to him,—if she had loved, she let it grey silently upon her heart, but I do not know now it was—though she was grower and wilder than ever—the bloom grew fainter on her cheek, and she seemed like a withered flower slowly fading away. The doctors shook their heads, and feared she was going into a consumption. Ah! sir, how many hearts are broken, and we blind, charge our loss to that hell disease. I am a believer in a broken heart.

There is a blight sometimes comes over the young and tender mind; a cold, deadly, mysterious feeling, drying up the very springs of life; a musing over an unrequited love, which sends its victim slowly and almost imperceptibly to its tomb. Take a bud nipped by an early frost, she droops silently away and no one knows the cause of her decline. A virtuous heart betrays its disappointment. It almost shuns from sickness feeling it unfit. It retires to itself in the mantle of its sorrow, and alone, and neglected, weeps over the ruin of its hopes, wearing day by day away, while the cheek pales and the eye grows unnaturally bright, until at that death steals in upon the sufferer, and the broken heart passes to that land "where the weary are at rest." It is generally a little cold, caught by some slight carelessness, that begins the work; for those, sir, who are thus deserted, lose all interest in the things of life. As the lily hangs its head and dies when forsaken by the waters it hath leaned upon, so the heart of a delicate woman, when once it is betrayed, turns from all solace and pines tremulously away. But do n't mind me, sir,—I'm afraid my eyes are getting old and watery—I'll take a tumbler to strengthen them, and then get on with my story.

Well, sir, at a last resort,—poor thing—she was ordered to travel. It happened that Harry having been loitering at Lake George, and drinking water and mawsene together at Saratoga, had just landed at the Catskill village in a yacht to ascend the mountain, when she should come up the river for the same purpose but Alice Leslie and her father. Livingston started, bowed, and his heart smote him when he saw the paleness of the sweet girl—the more start ling from the faint blush that dyed her marble brow as she returned his salutation. By one or intimate freaks they were both thrown together into the same carriage. Rallying all his faculties he soon became the life of the company. It is a dangerous thing to be placed as he was with one you have loved. It touches every chord of the heart, and recalls to little fact to do cause you remorse. But what was there that road can Harry Livingston could not do!

Have you ever ascended to the mountain house? Ay! Egad, sir, do if to morrow as you live and breathe. The country does not afford a finer sight. Hill and valley roll around you, and the roads wind along precipices hundreds of feet down—while the tops of the tall pines below wave on a level with the carriage window. Here a rill goes babbling and purling across the road, and then murmurs hoarsely, like a storm amid the forest boughs, as it leaps and tumbles down the steep. Away of the clouds are sailing round the mountain, or hitching from peak to peak across the valley. It was a sight to make the dumb speak, and they all fell into a joyous mood. But Alice did not join in it, and only answered in monosyllables, though oh! how mildly, to the questions addressed to her. Harry, however, did his best, and the whole coach was in a roar with his wit. But directly a thunder storm arose, and for a while all gazed silently upon it. At first the whole sky was a pitchy hue, and the dark brow of the mountain was wrapped in an inky shroud, from which at intervals the lurid lightnings zig-zagged, followed by the hoarse thunder, crashing, rolling, and echoing among the hills. Down in the valley, where the storm had not reached, the yellow corn-fields were smiling in the sun;—the brightness of the landscape below contrasting strongly with the dark and sullen character of the misty clouds above. For awhile, as I said, all was silent, but as the rain began to pour down in torrents, it beat into the stage, and numerous exclamations of discomfort arose from the passengers. The seat of Alice was particularly exposed, and several at once offered to exchange with her. But the only fit one was that which Harry occupied, and after much solicitation she consented to accept it. When they all came to be seated again, by a singular chance, sir, Harry found the only vacant seat was one beside her, and I need not tell a man like you that it sent a thrill, like an electric silver, through every nerve of his frame. As he sat down the eyes of Alice, for an instant, met his own, and where then quickly cast down, but that glance touched him to the heart, for he noticed how wan and ethereal like she had grown. If ever he had loved Alice all his old feelings returned upon him then. There is nothing like meek suffering to touch the heart. His gay cry was gone at once.

"Pardon me, Miss Leslie—but had n't you better put on a shawl?—the air is growing chill, and then in a lower tone, full of feeling, he added, "and you look unwell."

"Thank you," scarcely faltered the sweet girl, for the tone in which he spoke reminded her of other days, and it was as much as she could do to prevent a full burst from falling vent in tears. Harry noticed that her voice quivered, and that when he delicately placed the shawl upon her shoulders she could scarcely refrain from trembling. But observing as he thought himself he little suspected the cause.

Well, sir,—but let me fill your glass—the storm soon swept below, and while the top of the Catskill was ended with the sunlight, the dark clouds hung like a gauze veil around the body of the mountain. Down in the valley it was still raining, and the sunbeams glinting through, made every drop, as it came down, sparkle out as if a million of diamonds were falling flashing from the sky. It was indeed magnificent.

Meanwhile the rain had left the roads so slippery, that it was with difficulty they could proceed. The old gentlemen, however, made the most of it, grew lively as young bloods, and after awhile one of them asked Alice to sing. Ah! you may well laugh.—As I have a setting hen that hatch scapes to make men sociable, and sought set in, and the stars—the old rascals—began to walk through the flying scud as if they were drunk, the gentlemen became perfectly sociable, jovial, and Old Leslie was as high as any of them. But still Alice refused. She felt, poor girl, but little like the gay company, and it was only when Harry joined in the request, and she feared if she still continued he might suspect the truth, that she consented. It was, sir, one of those old Scotch songs that will live forever. At first her voice was low! how exquisitely sweet—then it became louder, and the melody stole out like the rich music of an angel, gushing forth in its own unmortal harmony. The listeners were spell bound. Harry had often heard her sing it in other days, and it came over him once more a train of early childhood. Leaning his head on his hand he was lost in thought. That song had touched a long silent chord in his bosom, and though he had been at the street of all the beauty notes he had ever heard, he felt at once that he had never truly loved but her. Ah! sir, there are feelings that lie dormant for years, and which we almost forget we have,—but which at last a word, a look, or a tune even awaken, and we are at once well nigh unmanned, under the flood of old memories that rush in upon us. Just as she ceased they stopped at the mountain house, and as they stepped out and the moonlight fell in instant on Alice's face, he noticed that her eyes were wet with tears. Alas! she had never been used to weep at it in other days. For an instant a suspicion of the truth flashed upon his mind, but should as he was, he he wasn't quite so vain as that.

I have said that the moon—but let me ring for some more sherbet—burst out in all her silvery beauty. Harry rambled since, but he could not forget the pale face of the once merry Alice, and soon returning from his solitary walk, who should he see as he reached the piazza, but Miss Leslie, standing by a solitary pillar, gazing out upon the moonlight. As if by some mysterious influence Livingston approached her. She did not seem aware of his presence, and for a moment he looked upon her unseen. It was a glorious night. The moon was sailing through the cloudless blue above, flooding hill, stream, and valley beneath, in her liquid light. Before them the mountain, sloping almost perpendicularly down, stretched the valley of the Hudson, nearly three thousand feet below, stretching for miles along the river, and spotted with farms and woodlands, that looked like green plain in a golden wake the lordly river, dwindled in the distance to a streamlet, slept a dozen miles away beneath its gauze like canopy of mist,—and beyond the hills and highlands of three states twelve miles the dim observatory of the Highlands. Over the whole of this nearly boundless landscape a shadowy haze hung, such as might have floated over the dreamy land of the Elf. If ever I could believe in fairies it would be at such a time and place. A calm, mysterious air breathed around the whole, and the mind catching the influence, became so tensibly softened and subdued. Livingston felt the power of the scene, and involuntarily exclaimed,

"Isn't it beautiful?"

"Mr. Livingston!" ejaculated the startled girl, hesitating a moment, and then moving to her side she added, "I—I—did not—know you were nigh."

Has Miss Leslie so completely forgotten an old friend?" he said, detaining her, "that she cannot even shake hands with him?"

"I—was startled," answered Alice, "but, perhaps," she continued evasively, scarce knowing whether to stay or not, yet at last determining to remain and continue as indifferent a manner as it her companion was but a common acquaintance. "Mr. Livingston is louder of gazing on such a scene alone."

An awkward pause ensued. Livingston felt how embarrassing it is to be left alone with one you have loved, and yet dare no longer speak to in your old way. A strange feeling came over him—he could feel the blood rush to his cheek.

"How think that song reminded me of other times," he said abruptly.

"I thought Mr. Livingston had long forgotten them, said Alice, in coldly and half reproachfully.

"Not forgotten—say any thing rather than that," involuntarily ejaculated Harry—for the wound of as often as such moments is thrown off our guard.

"There is an old German fairy song you used to sing—Miss Leslie—that might have been inspired by such a dreamy landscape as this, he continued recollecting himself, "may I presume to ask for it?

It would have accorded with Alice's assumed indifference to have at once and, as if carelessly complied—but she had another song in other days for him, that it woke too many old and tender memories in her bosom, and she feared it might lead her into an emotion that would betray what she would die rather than betray. The excitation, too, he had just uttered, and more than all its apparent fervor went to her heart, and dissipated all her resolutions to stem reason and feeling. She could not sing—she begged to be excused.

"Miss Leslie was surely not forgotten it," said Harry, as it hint, "but perhaps there are others—" he paused, not knowing how to end.

"Indeed I cannot sing to-night," said Alice, dropping her eyes, "some other time if you please, and the low, trembling voice said more than her words.

"You don't seem well, said Harry, looking feelingly into her face, "has you been long so?"

"Not very," she scarcely gasped—for the tone in which he spoke, and he calling her by her name as of old, was too much for her overcharged mind.

"I hope you have not been very ill—strange that I never heard of it," said Livingston, thoughtfully.

"It is only a cold—that has said longer than common," answered she with difficulty in her soft musical voice.

"Alice!" said Harry, after a moment's pause, "there is something grieves you—let me claim the privilege of an old friend, to inquire what it is. I know it is unusual for our parts to speak thus, but we were brought up from childhood together, and I feel there is something preying on your mind that causes your illness. You are paler, thinner, sadder than you used to be, and even your voice is mellowed down to an almost ethereal softness—what is the matter, Alice?"

Perhaps, at another time, mindful of his conduct the proud beauty would have repelled his questions with indignity, and walked silently away—but now she felt a mysterious influence chaining her to the spot, like the weird power which our olden fathers tell us often fixes our doom.

The tone of interest too in which Livingston spoke, touched the tenderest chords of her bosom, and though she struggled to answer, the words choked in her throat. Little she thought did he suspect the cause of her illness, and oh!—she would have given worlds that he never should. Yet it was agony to hear him thus speak, when after all it was only the common interest of friendship. She knew he had forgotten her, and she had long made up her mind to forget him—why then were they thus thrown together to call up old times again, and open afresh the wound long months of suffering had scarcely healed? She turned away her head—for she could not endure it—and the thick, burning tears welled one by one into her eyes, and dimmed her long, dark lashes.

"Alice!" said Harry, in a low voice.

She answered not,—and he thought he heard her sob.

"Alice!" said Harry, gently taking her unresisting hand, as a light flashed suddenly upon him, determining him at once to put his fate upon the cast of a die, "dear Alice!"—and he felt her hand tremble in his own like a leaf as he proceeded, "why have we been so long separated? God knows, I would coin my blood to save you a moment's sorrow, and though I have seen you so little of late, it was only because I dared not trifle with one I loved like you. You are a wealthy heiress—I am a penniless orphan, and I felt there was no hope for me in aspiring to the hand for which so many noblemen sighed in vain—now hope!—you are weeping—Alice, my Alice, and while a gush of ecstacy, which we feel but once in our lives—and that is when for the first time we know ourselves to be happy—he drew her his arm around the waist of the trembling girl, and drew her gently, yet unresisting, and weeping as she was toward his bosom. It was a holy moment, and for a while the sweet girl's heart would break. What would not Harry have given to have spared her that second anguish? At last he whispered,

"Alice!—can I forgiven?"

There was no answer—but as the lovely girl raised her head from his bosom, her deep blue eyes looked at him timidly a moment through their tears, and then, as if afraid she had gone too far, sank nestled her head again in his bosom. It needed nothing more. That look had told volumes. Ah! sir, there is nothing so delicious as the first moment of unrestrained confidence from one we love.

"And you will tell me, now, why you were ill" whispered Harry, kissing away her tears, as he raised her head gently from his shoulder.

"Hush!—hush!—I can tell you that but you they will miss us, whispered the beautiful girl, as her dark eyes fell to the ground, and she turned her head partially away. But even then I try could see that she blushed from brow to bosom.

"And so her heart was not broken after all, Jeremy,—odso blood!—but I was afraid it would be at times—poor as I was then, my old boy—but it told on the sherbet any how."

"No, it was not broken—for from that night Alice grew better, and when, after some demurring from her father, Livingston, they were married, she looked fairer and more beautiful than ever. Egad, sir, old as I was, I danced at her wedding, and it almost makes me go off in a paroxysm to think of it. But here's to them—a bumper!—may your days be long, my blade, as sweet a bride and as merry a wedding."

"Thank you!—with all my soul—but what said the doctors, Jeremy?"

"Oh, I!—hah, sir, that's the joke of it,—they set down a visit to the mountains, in their materia medica, as a sovereign cure for the first stages of consumption. Consumption—poor thing!—hah! they just as they did, it might have numbered sweet little Alice among its victims, and no one but herself would have known that her heart was broken. It came pretty nigh it, that was certain, and I'm sure I'm thankful husband's for it after they were married—the scamp. Ah! sir, your health—I must take a tumbler after that.

J. S.

Written for the Saturday Evening Post.

THE TWILIGHT HOUR.

I was an Eve—the sunset sky
Had melted to the zephyr's purple die,
And through the trees, a mellow light was shed
To queenly majesty and beauty said.
The place like a dome of mass spread's
Of structure of the silvery gleams spread's,
And half of a lonesome world a spot too bright,
But might unfeely of impure to blight.
In the calm lustre of the deep Lagoon,
With equal splendour, shone a second moon,
Or, as a breath but tremble o'er the stream,
A shower of pearls across the sudden gleam,
On other hands the trees in foliage flung
Their shadows, and in graceful ease hung
Low o'er the waters as with guardian care,
They seemed to lower o'er that streamlet fair,
Hark! through the silence rises a heavenly strain,
Soft as the tinkling of a summer's rain,
Sweet as though voice unearthly mingled there,
O! female, the tongue evening air
Was thrilling with the music breathing wand,
Such thrilling intensity seems to a soul strong,
Of pleasure and love, dreams a child's song,
An angel minstrel, troubadour, and blind,
Invisible, yet visibly indined,
The gentle melodies floated in the glad evening air
Voices of hopes, hearts the soul, expressed,
And a full tide of feeling raised in the breast
I'll watch the eve and its subjects, be a sing—
Who where's more than his largest sings long

Meanwhile, sweet minstrel let us once more
Unknown's and that dark curtained door
With its mysterious mists, these sunny hours are,
Where now fling wonders, oh my childhood's
Hours,
Again, I come, fill and pagodas pass
In imagine now, oh! the magic glass—
I gaze on each dear, familiar town,
Their shadows throughout thy mirror now
In life like beauty—each blooming cheek,
And radiant, eye or fond and meek,
Each bright young head with its clustering hair
And its fairy smile a mingling there,
And the sayings of love in my lately breast
I hear some long lost child in a dreary rest
Now, I hear the voice of a long gone,
The sigh more sweet in dimmer, yet the more,
Oh blessed and lovely and happy time!
The early hour of childhood's prime,
Now my weary spirit is winging back
To the flowers and bounts of my morning track,
When the grief which rung the heart at night
Was chased by the wing of slumber light,
When round the old fire I there played a smile
Though the eye might swim in tears the while,
And sunny gleams and sudden showers,
Made April times in childhood's hours.
When never a thought of care or sorrow,
Rose such our visions of to-morrow,
Tuesday was bright and until a came,
We dream'd the future would be the same,
Alas, that we find each youthful dream
But a smiling cheat—a meteor gleam!
Yet leaves there still a lingering spark
Our path to illume, lower or dark,
As comes to the dark cloud lower
Our earth's tail, and its tally beacon,
The golden beams from beyond the tomb
Force brighter through the gathering gloom.
Still heart-wound of my spirit springs—
Though short in flight on its broken wings—
For there is treasured the hope and trust
That love when the frame has returned to dust—

The last, sweet, melancholy tones were hushed
And tears from radiant eyes now softly gushed
Young, happy hearts with heavenly joy stirred,
Predicted the minstrel many a kindly word
And gifts to number him on his weary way,
And cheer the lonely evening of his day;
Remembrance of each gem's look and smile,
Will long be nodded fond hearts and was beguile,
And harper now, he, with his youthful guide,
Again departs upon his wanderings wide. ROSALIE.

* The Angel of Song—among the Persians.

From the Examiner and Western Monthly Review.

IOWA TERRITORY.

Its Present Condition and Prospective Increase.

BY JOHN PLUMBE, JR.

I greet the readers of the Examiner from distant Iowa—the almost unknown solitude of 1835, the rapidly advancing Territory of 1839, the vigorous State, as we may confidently assert, of 1841. I am a dweller in the Far West, as this lovely region is still called by the inhabitants of the Atlantic States; although to locate the term, the inquirer for the whereabouts of the Far West would, if seeking the information from an Iowa miner, be informed that it is somewhere in the vicinity of the Platte river, just under the sunset shadow of the Stony Mountains; while a good humored smile would reward his ignorance. If he assigned the locale of the words to the business-governing settlements of the young Territory.

In truth if the term be applicable, as I so believe, to that portion of our national domain yet unsurveyed and free from man's agricultural dominion, the enquirer must not expect to find it here. We may not have among us the stately evidences of refined civilization, nor yet can we lay claims to walls of brick and mortar venerable in their decay. We are too young for that; but we can boast a well-disposed and rapidly increasing population; settlements of yesterday, to day clamoring justly for city charters, a steadily increasing trade, an adequate internal commerce; wealth for all who pursue honest means for its acquisition; temples for justice, for religion, and, as the foundation of both, for education, the wrought done of the capital harmonizing well with the ruder, yet equally pleasing, aspect of the school house. The signs of the times all point onward—the spirit of the age is shown to be progressive every where; but no where is the promise greater, the spirit of enterprise based upon safer grounds, or the signs of the future more auspicious than in Iowa. Some of my readers may be disposed to smile at the hand for which so many doubtful years have been now hope!—you are weeping—Alice, my Alice, and while a gush of ecstacy, which we feel but once in our lives—and that is when for the first time we know ourselves to be happy—he drew her his arm around the waist of the trembling girl, and drew her gently, yet unresisting, and weeping as she was toward his bosom. It was a holy moment, and for a while the sweet girl's heart would break. What would not Harry have given to have spared her that second anguish? At last he whispered,

"Alice!—can I forgiven?"

There was no answer—but as the lovely girl raised her head from his bosom, her deep blue eyes looked at him timidly a moment through their tears, and then, as if afraid she had gone too far, sank nestled her head again in his bosom. It needed nothing more. That look had told volumes. Ah! sir, there is nothing so delicious as the first moment of unrestrained confidence from one we love.

"And you will tell me, now, why you were ill" whispered Harry, kissing away her tears, as he raised her head gently from his shoulder.

"Hush!—hush!—I can tell you that but you they will miss us, whispered the beautiful girl, as her dark eyes fell to the ground, and she turned her head partially away. But even then I try could see that she blushed from brow to bosom.

"And so her heart was not broken after all, Jeremy,—odso blood!—but I was afraid it would be at times—poor as I was then, my old boy—but it told on the sherbet any how."

"No, it was not broken—for from that night Alice grew better, and when, after some demurring from her father, Livingston, they were married, she looked fairer and more beautiful than ever. Egad, sir, old as I was, I danced at her wedding, and it almost makes me go off in a paroxysm to think of it. But here's to them—a bumper!—may your days be long, my blade, as sweet a bride and as merry a wedding."

"Thank you!—with all my soul—but what said the doctors, Jeremy?"

"Oh, I!—hah, sir, that's the joke of it,—they set down a visit to the mountains, in their materia medica, as a sovereign cure for the first stages of consumption. Consumption—poor thing!—hah! they just as they did, it might have numbered sweet little Alice among its victims, and no one but herself would have known that her heart was broken. It came pretty nigh it, that was certain, and I'm sure I'm thankful husband's for it after they were married—the scamp. Ah! sir, your health—I must take a tumbler after that.

J. S.

Written for the Saturday Evening Post.

THE TWILIGHT HOUR.

I was an Eve—the sunset sky
Had melted to the zephyr's purple die,
And through the trees, a mellow light was shed
To queenly majesty and beauty said.
The place like a dome of mass spread's
Of structure of the silvery gleams spread's,
And half of a lonesome world a spot too bright,
But might unfeely of impure to blight.
In the calm lustre of the deep Lagoon,
With equal splendour, shone a second moon,
Or, as a breath but tremble o'er the stream,
A shower of pearls across the sudden gleam,
On other hands the trees in foliage flung
Their shadows, and in graceful ease hung
Low o'er the waters as with guardian care,
They seemed to lower o'er that streamlet fair,
Hark! through the silence rises a heavenly strain,
Soft as the tinkling of a summer's rain,
Sweet as though voice unearthly mingled there,
O! female, the tongue evening air
Was thrilling with the music breathing wand,
Such thrilling intensity seems to a soul strong,
Of pleasure and love, dreams a child's song,
An angel minstrel, troubadour, and blind,
Invisible, yet visibly indined,
The gentle melodies floated in the glad evening air
Voices of hopes, hearts the soul, expressed,
And a full tide of feeling raised in the breast
I'll watch the eve and its subjects, be a sing—
Who where's more than his largest sings long

Meanwhile, sweet minstrel let us once more
Unknown's and that dark curtained door
With its mysterious mists, these sunny hours are,
Where now fling wonders, oh my childhood's
Hours,
Again, I come, fill and pagodas pass
In imagine now, oh! the magic glass—
I gaze on each dear, familiar town,
Their shadows throughout thy mirror now
In life like beauty—each blooming cheek,
And radiant, eye or fond and meek,
Each bright young head with its clustering hair
And its fairy smile a mingling there,
And the sayings of love in my lately breast
I hear some long lost child in a dreary rest
Now, I hear the voice of a long gone,
The sigh more sweet in dimmer, yet the more,
Oh blessed and lovely and happy time!
The early hour of childhood's prime,
Now my weary spirit is winging back
To the flowers and bounts of my morning track,
When the grief which rung the heart at night
Was chased by the wing of slumber light,
When round the old fire I there played a smile
Though the eye might swim in tears the while,
And sunny gleams and sudden showers,
Made April times in childhood's hours.
When never a thought of care or sorrow,
Rose such our visions of to-morrow,
Tuesday was bright and until a came,
We dream'd the future would be the same,
Alas, that we find each youthful dream
But a smiling cheat—a meteor gleam!
Yet leaves there still a lingering spark
Our path to illume, lower or dark,
As comes to the dark cloud lower
Our earth's tail, and its tally beacon,
The golden beams from beyond the tomb
Force brighter through the gathering gloom.
Still heart-wound of my spirit springs—
Though short in flight on its broken wings—
For there is treasured the hope and trust
That love when the frame has returned to dust—

The last, sweet, melancholy tones were hushed
And tears from radiant eyes now softly gushed
Young, happy hearts with heavenly joy stirred,
Predicted the minstrel many a kindly word
And gifts to number him on his weary way,
And cheer the lonely evening of his day;
Remembrance of each gem's look and smile,
Will long be nodded fond hearts and was beguile,
And harper now, he, with his youthful guide,
Again departs upon his wanderings wide. ROSALIE.

* The Angel of Song—among the Persians.

I greet the readers of the Examiner from distant Iowa—the almost unknown solitude of 1835, the rapidly advancing Territory of 1839, the vigorous State, as we may confidently assert, of 1841. I am a dweller in the Far West, as this lovely region is still called by the inhabitants of the Atlantic States; although to locate the term, the inquirer for the whereabouts of the Far West would, if seeking the information from an Iowa miner, be informed that it is somewhere in the vicinity of the Platte river, just under the sunset shadow of the Stony Mountains; while a good humored smile would reward his ignorance. If he assigned the locale of the words to the business-governing settlements of the young Territory.

In truth if the term be applicable, as I so believe, to that portion of our national domain yet unsurveyed and free from man's agricultural dominion, the enquirer must not expect to find it here. We may not have among us the stately evidences of refined civilization, nor yet can we lay claims to walls of brick and mortar venerable in their decay. We are too young for that; but we can boast a well-disposed and rapidly increasing population; settlements of yesterday, to day clamoring justly for city charters, a steadily increasing trade, an adequate internal commerce; wealth for all who pursue honest means for its acquisition; temples for justice, for religion, and, as the foundation of both, for education, the wrought done of the capital harmonizing well with the ruder, yet equally pleasing, aspect of the school house. The signs of the times all point onward—the spirit of the age is shown to be progressive every where; but no where is the promise greater, the spirit of enterprise based upon safer grounds, or the signs of the future more auspicious than in Iowa. Some of my readers may be disposed to smile at the hand for which so many doubtful years have been now hope!—you are weeping—Alice, my Alice, and while a gush of ecstacy, which we feel but once in our lives—and that is when for the first time we know ourselves to be happy—he drew her his arm around the waist of the trembling girl, and drew her gently, yet unresisting, and weeping as she was toward his bosom. It was a holy moment, and for a while the sweet girl's heart would break. What would not Harry

Iowa is detached from Wisconsin Territory in 1838, in July, of which year it was organized into a separate Territorial Government. The population at that time amounted to 22,859; but the migration since has quadrupled the amount.—Here, as in all new districts, the body of population forms in, and contiguous to, the river banks, and the settlements made there are, as soon as the larger settlements was important as points for internal trade, the area of population will be extended, new towns located, agricultural operations, in the interior, commenced, and the old settlers, in respect to their interests, from nature her distant demesne, to incorporate without the advantage of business enterprise.

The climate is, all the world knows, exhibitions and variable, and, as the seasons change, changes characterising the temperature of the States north and east. The reports of gentlemen engaged in the service of the United States Government, also bear this respect to Iowa, a favored region, so less endowed in the rich wealth of its minerals than in the adaptation of its rivers to the wants of the country through which they flow. A reference to the map of the Union, shows that the country connected with us by streams capable of steamboat navigation, is of greater extent and more important in its trading operations than any other in the Union. Steamboats, of late years, have numbered sweet little Alice among its victims, and no one but herself would have known that her heart was broken. It came pretty nigh it, that was certain, and I'm sure I'm thankful husband's for it after they were married—the scamp. Ah! sir, your health—I must take a tumbler after that.

J. S.

Written for the Saturday Evening Post.

THE TWILIGHT HOUR.

I was an Eve—the sunset sky
Had melted to the zephyr's purple die,
And through the trees, a mellow light was shed
To queenly majesty and beauty said.
The place like a dome of mass spread's
Of structure of the silvery gleams spread's,
And half of a lonesome world a spot too bright,
But might unfeely of impure to blight.
In the calm lustre of the deep Lagoon,
With equal splendour, shone a second moon,
Or, as a breath but tremble o'er the stream,
A shower of pearls across the sudden gleam,
On other hands the trees in foliage flung
Their shadows, and in graceful ease hung
Low o'er the waters as with guardian care,
They seemed to lower o'er that streamlet fair,
Hark! through the silence rises a heavenly strain,
Soft as the tinkling of a summer's rain,
Sweet as though voice unearthly mingled there,
O! female, the tongue evening air
Was thrilling with the music breathing wand,
Such thrilling intensity seems to a soul strong,
Of pleasure and love, dreams a child's song,
An angel minstrel, troubadour, and blind,
Invisible, yet visibly indined,
The gentle melodies floated in the glad evening air
Voices of hopes, hearts the soul, expressed,
And a full tide of feeling raised in the breast
I'll watch the eve and its subjects, be a sing—
Who where's more than his largest sings long

Meanwhile, sweet minstrel let us once more
Unknown's and that dark curtained door
With its mysterious mists, these sunny hours are,
Where now fling wonders, oh my childhood's
Hours,
Again, I come, fill and pagodas pass
In imagine now, oh! the magic glass—
I gaze on each dear, familiar town,
Their shadows throughout thy mirror now
In life like beauty—each blooming cheek,
And radiant, eye or fond and meek,
Each bright young head with its clustering hair
And its fairy smile a mingling there,
And the sayings of love in my lately breast
I hear some long lost child in a dreary rest
Now, I hear the voice of a long gone,
The sigh more sweet in dimmer, yet the more,
Oh blessed and lovely and happy time!
The early hour of childhood's prime,
Now my weary spirit is winging back
To the flowers and bounts of my morning track,
When the grief which rung the heart at night
Was chased by the wing of slumber light,
When round the old fire I there played a smile
Though the eye might swim in tears the while,
And sunny gleams and sudden showers,
Made April times in childhood's hours.
When never a thought of care or sorrow,
Rose such our visions of to-morrow,
Tuesday was bright and until a came,
We dream'd the future would be the same,
Alas, that we find each youthful dream
But a smiling cheat—a meteor gleam!
Yet leaves there still a lingering spark
Our path to illume, lower or dark,
As comes to the dark cloud lower
Our earth's tail, and its tally beacon,
The golden beams from beyond the tomb
Force brighter through the gathering gloom.
Still heart-wound of my spirit springs—
Though short in flight on its broken wings—
For there is treasured the hope and trust
That love when the frame has returned to dust—

The last, sweet, melancholy tones were hushed
And tears from radiant eyes now softly gushed
Young, happy hearts with heavenly joy stirred,
Predicted the minstrel many a kindly word
And gifts to number him on his weary way,
And cheer the lonely evening of his day;
Remembrance of each gem's look and smile,
Will long be nodded fond hearts and was beguile,
And harper now, he, with his youthful guide,
Again departs upon his wanderings wide. ROSALIE.

* The Angel of Song—among the Persians.

The Falls of Saint Anthony—are about seven miles above Saint Peters, and in themselves afford ample compensation for the time required in accomplishing a visit to them. It is only surprising that a laudable desire of increasing their information respecting the various portions of this mighty Republic, has not already induced a greater number of our citizens to worship Nature at this her shrine, than which, perhaps there is no other portion of our continent more emphatically deserving of the appellation. Certainly she can no where be more appropriately worshipped, or surrounded with more striking attributes of native wildness and primeval beauty. How many thousands upon thousands annually flock to participate in the monotonous and frivolous amusements of our fashionable watering places, whose knowledge of the country is so far from perfect that the name even of the Falls of Saint Anthony is comparatively unknown to them; and yet the facilities afforded for visiting them, by means of splendid steamboats, are not surpassed by those of any fashionable resort in the older portions of the Union. Those who visit these Falls at present generally stay no longer than the boat in which they are conveyed, although tolerable accommodations may be procured at Saint Peters, by those who feel disposed to cultivate the opportunity for enjoying the examination of the surrounding interesting scenery. It is in contemplation to build a fine hotel at the Falls for the accommodation of the increasing numbers who now go there during the warm season. A traveller visiting the place, says

"If the project succeeds it will afford a delightful resort in the summer from the cares of the world for the sum of business, and the invalid will be invigorated by healthful breezes and a delicious climate. Many who have heard of the Falls of Saint Anthony are not aware of the splendid scenery with which the country abounds. Smooth, glittering sheets of water, verdant meadows and high bleak bluffs, give a bold and grandeur to the landscape. The wide extended prairies, well stocked with grass and blooming with many kind of flowers—the lake abounding with fish, and their shores covered with beautiful specimens of curiosities and incrustations of shells, offer great attractions to the sportsman and the man of taste. The savage can be hebe seen in his wildest state, and the Indian dance will be no rare occurrence. In truth I do not know where a more romantic could be spent more pleasantly any where, if proper accommodations could be had, than at the Falls of Saint Anthony."

Iowa is now fairly on her continually pouring over the barrier to its progress, and sending, as it were, to God the anthem of the inhabitants, contrasted, as the voice of the cataract is, with the silence of nature in her wild scenery and the beautiful repose of the illstretching prairie—all combine to subdue the feelings, and render them subjective to the sway of the moral mind. An mind, for instance, of the Pittsburgh Visiter, who narrates in the style of a cultivated poet while he sees with the eye of a painter, published several months since a letter from the Falls of Saint Anthony, dated by him to St. Anthony's. It must be regretted that he does not more particularly describe the great wonder itself as well as the country adjacent. His letter, however, is so full of genuine accurate, and we give it in his own words

"Standing on the western bank of the Mississippi, you behold the stream dividing and encircling an island immediately above the falls, tumbling, and for two hundred yards in agitation it appears to regret the formidable feat it is destined to accomplish.

"The river, which here is about seven hundred yards wide, tumbles over a sheet of water over a league extending across the stream; in the centre a projecting point of the rock, some what resembling a horse shoe, divides the fall. Into two parts, the western has a perpendicular drop upon huge masses of detached rocks, which are distributed in the bed in a state of chaotic confusion, Jim's you mind I told you. There," said he, as he shoved the ball to its place, and carefully poured some priming into the pan, "it's done in quick time by them what have slept your in and your out with red Indians on every side of 'em. Good night to ye, Doctor; you need'nt lift narthe-tse—the Register may as well keep 'em till old Richly goes in himself."

So saying, the two travellers parted, each urging his horse to greater speed, as the sight threatened shortly to set in dark and stormy.—The old hunter soliloquizing to himself in mental soliloquy, that the Doctor was a "right nice and cute young fellow, considering he was raised among Yankees," rode briskly along the path. He had proceeded about four or five miles farther on his way, when he perceived that the track which he before observed, turned aside, toward a little point of woods, that put out into the prairie. "So, so," said he, "Slaymush has been out among the deer to-day; I was in hopes 'twas some one going up to the head-waters;" and he kept racking along the road, when suddenly the loud report of a musket was heard reverberating through the night, and the old man, writhing and mortally wounded, fell from his horse, which, scared by the occurrence, ran wildly over the prairie. A few minutes afterward, the figure of a man stole out from the shadow of the trees, and cautiously approached the place, as if fearful his victim should not yet be dead; but apparently satisfied in this particular, by his motionless silence, he advanced, and proceeded immediately to examine the pockets of the deceased.

"Damnation!"—uttered he at length, when a fruitless search was finished, "the old curmudgeon hasn't got no money after all; and I've sot a bullet through his head for nothing.—I'm sure I heard him say, in Brown's tavern, down in the settlement, that old Richly give it to him to carry. Well, it's his own fault, anyhow; for telling a bragging he shout it; and the grey-headed scoundrel went never jour me again, for using a smooth here, before a whole company of Kentuck' squatters—it carried true enough to do his business. I'm sorry I dropped that dame flask, though; but this powder-horn will make some amends," grumbled the wretch, as he tore the article he spoke of from the breast, where it had hung for forty years.

"What the devil have we here?" said he again, as in stepping from the body, he struck his foot against the rifle that the murdered man had dropped; "ho, ho," muttered he, in a chuckling tone, as he discharged it in the air—"ho, ho, if worst comes to worst, they'll think this piece went off by accident, and shot him.—But there's no danger—it will snow before daylight, and cover the trail; and the prairie wolves will finish the job."

Thus muttering, the ruffian remounted the animal he held by the bridle, and trotted across the prairie, nearly at right angles with the path, along which the unfortunate hunter had been travelling."

THE SILK CULTURIST.

AN IMPORTANT MOVEMENT.

In view of the pecuniary difficulties which now interfere with the general prosperity, it will be gratifying to those who think that a large portion of these difficulties are occasioned by our purchasing too much and producing too little, to perceive any thing that may hold out a fair prospect of correcting the evil. The immense foreign debt against us it is of importance to meet in some other way than by the payment of specie. If our country is capable of yielding that which will furnish a ready mode of liquidating this foreign balance, should not the attempt be made to realize so important an object?

Thoroughly convinced that this object can and ought to be accomplished by means of the cultivation of Silk, for the production of which the climate and soil of large portions of the country are proved to be every way suited, a meeting was recently called for the purpose of taking the subject into earnest consideration. This meeting, composed of a large number of our most respectable and enterprising citizens, became satisfied that the "position which the city of Philadelphia occupies, as a metropolis embracing a vast amount of capital and enterprise, calls for the adoption of such measures by those of her citizens who are interested in the Silk business, as will place her in a position of the most commanding character in relation to that new and growing interest." The meeting was farther of opinion that "the Silk business has been established more firmly in our country than the public have any knowledge of, and that a national society would greatly extend this knowledge, and produce conviction as to its feasibility and profitableness." A society was thereupon projected, and after several meetings its organization has been completed under the title of the "National Association for the Promotion of the Silk Culture in the United States." Among the objects which it proposes, is to establish a mart for the purchase of cocoons, raw and manufactured Silk of American growth, with a view to an extensive public exhibition; the memorializing of Congress; the dissemination of information by means of lectures, publications and such other matters as may legitimately come within the power of such an association. The members pay annually five dollars for the purpose of creating a fund for the prosecution of its intentions, and already nearly two hundred names have been enrolled upon its list, and large accessions are made at each of its weekly meetings.

Aware that much would depend upon the character, ability and public spirit of those who may preside over and direct its proceedings, it was a matter of anxiety, in filling the office of President, to secure the co-operation of one who should combine in his own person all those essential qualities." This object the Association has been fortunate enough to secure in the selection of Nicholas Biddle, Esq. who, in consenting to preside over the deliberations of the Association, observed: "I am sensible of the distinction conferred by this appointment, and regret only that I shall be so little able to realize the expectations of the Association. At the same time I am so anxious to contribute by any means in my power to the encouragement of our own national industry, that I feel reluctant to decline any effort by which I may be useful." The discerning mind of this distinguished citizen, in publicly evincing his estimation of the true character of the silk culture, has but accorded the views promulgated by Benjamin Franklin in 1770, and more recently by Ex-President Adams, Mr. Randolph, and others, who in Congress have recorded their convictions of the perfect adaptation of our soil and climate, which, by the latter gentleman, was, in his report as chairman of the committee appointed by Congress to investigate the subject, declared to be fully equal to the best portions of China for the production of silk. The success of the present year in producing superior silk, at a cost which will realize a better profit than any other crop that can be put into the ground, has been amply sufficient to satisfy all who have taken the trouble to examine for themselves, and nothing appears to be now wanting but a proper spirit of enterprise and perseverance to effect the speedy and permanent establishment of this important branch of national industry.

The immense tax which the silk produce exhibits the French nation to levy upon other countries, has placed her, during the present commercial embarrassments, with her abundant surplus of the precious metals, in a position which our own country might now have been nearer the attainment of, had the advice and example of Franklin been followed. What this was, we find stated in M'Mahon's American Gardener, published in this city so long ago as 1806. From page 591 we copy that "Silk" has been raised and manufactured into most excellent fabric under the direction of that great and venerable patriot and friend to mankind, Dr. Benjamin Franklin. That so useful a pursuit should be suffered to die away, in a country so well adapted for it in any in the universe, is an extraordinary to it is unfortunate, and injurious to the real interest of the nation."

Too long has the nation neglected the advantages to be reaped from this source. The National Association now formed in aid of the culture of silk, will, it is hoped, succeed in awakening the country to a sense of its importance.—Among its officers we find the name of the venerable Duponcceau, the field of whose American fame, manufactured under his own personal direction in this city, as presented and unfolded by order of Congress in its hall, displayed a splendid evidence of American skill and material. The Hon. G. D. Wall of N. Jersey, Calvin Blythe, Jonathan Roberts, Edmund Ruffin, William C. Rives, and other distinguished citizens of this and the neighboring states are also among its vice-presidents, while the board of directors presents an array of talent and intelligence as well as public spirit, from whose labors much may be safely anticipated.

The Association will meet again this evening at Evans's, in George street above Sixth, at 7½ o'clock, when all who feel an interest in the matter are invited to attend.

ON KEEPING SILK WORM EGGS.

Immense quantities of silk worm eggs have been lost this season by premature hatching. In one instance, upward of one hundred concentrated had been imported from France, and that had been kept since their arrival in this country in a refrigerator, at a temperature of forty-four degrees, all hatched before there was any mulberry leaves to feed the worms with, and they were of course all lost. The unusual warm weather of the month of April, has doubtless caused much loss to those who had kept their eggs in the usual way. These losses, however, though a present evil, will result in ultimate gain. They will prove by example what almost every body has heretofore refused to learn from precept, to wit: That silk worm eggs must be constantly kept in a cold place, from the time they are laid, till they are wanted for hatching; and that any exposure to warmth at any time during winter or early spring, will certainly start the growth of the embryo, and insure the premature hatching of the eggs. Again and again has the writer of these remarks cautioned the public on this subject. The object of this paper now is to give a few hints that may be useful in securing eggs for another season.

In no event can imported eggs be depended upon for anything more than raising a few worms, for a future supply of eggs; because during the passage they are necessarily exposed to a warm temperature, and if they arrive safe, will certainly hatch soon afterward; in which event but few can be saved, unless they happen to arrive after the leaves are developed, which is scarcely to be expected, as the warm weather would hatch them on the passage. It is probable that if they were imported in the fall, and immediately placed in an ice-house and kept there steadily till wanted for hatching, they might be kept till the middle of May, in this latitude, but not longer. Thousands of persons have now learned from experience, that silkworm eggs hatch as readily in an ice-house as any where else, if they have at any time previously been exposed to a warm temperature.

It is earnestly recommended that all persons who are fortunate enough to have silkworms, now select from the first formed cocoons a sufficient number to produce as many eggs as they may want for next year's use, and within three or four days after the eggs are laid, place them securely in a very cold, dry cellar, or an ice-house, and there keep them steadily till wanted for hatching next season: they may then bring them out in such portions as they wish for successive crops during the season. Those kept in a cellar, however, during the fall, must be put into an ice-house before the 1st of February, or they cannot be kept from hatching in May.

Eggs that have been carried about the country during winter, cannot be kept from hatching during the warm weather, the latter part of April and in May. Therefore, purchasers of eggs, under such circumstances, should be prepared to feed the worms by the 1st of May, at the latest, in the latitude of Baltimore.

The French and Italians scrape the eggs from the cloth or paper on which the insect has deposited them, before exposing them to hatch. Indeed, many of them keep them "in bulk," like a parcel of seeds, from the time they are laid till next season, and most of the eggs that are imported into the country are put up in boxes, like so many cabbage seed. Notwithstanding the high authority from which this practice emanates, we are well convinced of its impropriety. The close contact of so many animated existences, we should naturally conclude, even without experience, would generate heat, foul air, and finally cause the death of the whole. And that it has this effect, is abundantly proved by numerous instances where they have been imported in this way, and on opening the boxes, the putrifying mass of eggs was extremely offensive, the eggs being all dead. Another objection is found in the difficulty of hatching the worms from these loose eggs. The little insect, when he gets his head and fore-legs out of the shell, reaches circumspectly about, and unless hold of the paper or board, and in this way speedily pulls himself out of the shell; but if the egg be not fastened to the paper, he cannot thus pull himself out, but pulls the shell along. In this way we have seen a little worm working and struggling for an hour, and very often perish at last. It is not uncommon to see them come out tail first—in that case, they are worse off still; for as soon as their first pair of teeth touch any external object, they push themselves about, with the shell covering their head and the fore part of the body. When the eggs are left glued upon the paper, as is the custom in this country, they are not subject to spontaneous heat, and are consequently preserved with more certainty; and at the time of bringing them out, none of the worms are lost from difficult hatching from the above cause.

EXTRAORDINARY MUSICAL PERFORMER.

The following we copy from the London Times of September 7th, as a matter likely to create at no distant day, considerable excitement in this city. In addition to the importance of the invention alluded to, and its really surprising character, we have shrewd reason to believe that the Trompeter, and its new appendage will be first exhibited in Philadelphia, ere it takes its departure for England, and we think we could even designate the lady, whom it is purposed that it shall first accompany. As far as musical accomplishments extend, she is indeed a "Syren;" and we have no doubt the thrilling notes of the Trompeter, will admirably assist her vocal efforts in their effect.

We subjoin the article referred to.

(From the London Times of September 7th.)

"A great sensation has been created among the musical professors and amateurs of Genoa, by the accomplishment of what they term the 'Ne plus ultra' of mechanical achievement, by a celebrated artisan residing in that neighborhood. The details, as given in the journals furnished us by the politeness of Messrs. Baring & Brothers, are very interesting, and from which we gather the following:

"It appears that the celebrated Maelasi, during his sojourn in America, for the purpose of exhibiting his Automaton Performer on the Trumpet, and where he amassed great riches, was struck with the idea that it would be possible to produce an appendage to his Trumpeter, which would endow it with the faculty of accompanying the human voice, observing the rests, pauses, change of time, cadences, &c. precisely in the manner of a living artist.

"The master mind of Maelasi, having conceived the idea, his plans were quickly matured and drawn out, which he immediately forwarded with a 'carte blanche' as to expense to his friend, who had previously co-operated with him in the construction of his wonderful Automaton performer.

"It was a task of no ordinary difficulty, but with the certainty of ample remuneration, the ingenious artist set to work, and two years of incessant application, and repeated failures, produced at last a completely successful result, upon which he wrote to Maelasi, who unfortunately about this time died, while on his passage from Havana to Philadelphia, at which place it is believed his effects were sold at auction, and among them the Automaton Trumpeter. Upon hearing this, the artisan offered his appendage for sale at Genoa, where a well known musical professor lately attached to Drury Lane Theatre, succeeded in obtaining it at a high price, and immediately embarked for the United States, to purchase the Automaton Trumpeter, with the determination, as we understand, of its being first exhibited in London, at a series of concerts to be given in Exeter Hall. Which of our syrens it is to accompany, we have not yet heard, but we presume, (if the proprietor wishes to realise a fortune) she will be one of our own country women. We understand that Paganini, to whom it was shown, expressed himself highly delighted with it.

"When will wonders cease? or who shall define limits to the production of mental and physical energies combined? Here, we are to have apparently a mere block of wood carved into the human shape, which, as though enchanted by the fervis of Prometheus, is to perform the functions of a living artist, and one too of taste and cultivation, on that most difficult of instruments, the Trompet."

Saturday Evening Post.

Edited by

G. R. GRAHAM & J. S. DU SOLLE.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1839.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION, &c.

$2 per annum—$2 if paid in advance; $1.50 in advance for 6 months.

Subscribers may commence to date their letters addressed to us, "The Post," of itself is not a frank.

Agents will please address their letters with their names or initials.

Other letters will not be taken from the Post-office unless the postage is paid.

Papers discontinued only at the end of the current half year's subscription, and then only at the option of the Publisher if arrearages are due.

Small Bank Notes of solvent Banks received in payment for our bills.

Agents are earnestly solicited to make quick remittances, without which it is difficult to keep supplies current. Then should always give names, and direct post for.

Any persons for warding 7 or 8 dollars current, free of postage, in advance, will be entitled to six copies.

Remove all doubt, please state the Post-office removed from as well as to which the paper is to be addressed.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. S. C." His article looks like a very good one; if the author will furnish us with a legible manuscript, it will give us much satisfaction to publish it.

"E. F." is quite a novice in the art of making verses.

"S. H." We regret to state that the communication he alludes to is mislaid. Has he a copy?

"Beauty," this time, we do not admire. The writer is very careless, and mars his natural talent by a lack of attention. "Break" and "brake," is a poor rhyme, and "soue" and "perfume," no rhyme at all. Besides, the lines are out of measure.

"T." is acceptable; we like his logic, as well as his eloquence.

"Pliny," writes as if he imitated his great namesake in at least one respect—i. e. in venturing too near the crater.

As one shall be out now very soon in an entirely new, handsome dress, and feel disposed to infuse new vigor, and a much greater amount than usual of originality into the Saturday Evening Post, we should really be gratified if our readers would favor us more frequently, with something good, in the way of either Poetry or Prose. Among our thirty thousand subscribers, extending from Florida to the Canadas, and from the Atlantic to the wild prairies of our Western Territories, there must be a multitude capable of obliging us in this particular, and of ministering to the laudible apetite for novelty, which is the prominent characteristic of the day.

REDUCTION OF POSTAGE.

We see that a circular has been started on the rounds, recommending to the good people of the United States, to petition Congress for a reduction of the rates of postage, and we presume that no sensible man in Congress, will oppose the measure. We hope that a reform will not only carried so far as to reduce the price upon letters, so that no letter mailed and carried within the limits of the states, shall cost more than ten cents, and that but few shall cost more than two, as is contemplated in the circular, but we hope to see the principle carried farther, and to lessen, if not abolish the postage upon pamphlets, magazines and newspapers.

Since Britain, loaded with a heavy National Debt, has set the example, we can scarcely suppose that serious objections will be offered in our own country, burdened as it is with a surplus revenue. It does not comport with the genius of our institutions that there should be a tax upon the means of intellectual culture; nor with the spirit of an adventurous and enterprising people, that it should be levied heavily upon the medium of interchange of sentiment, among mercantile and business men, or of citizens widely remote from each other. We do not advocate a total abandonment of all charge of postage, it would be to convert our mails into vehicles for the transportation of all sorts of lumber, but the rates might be considerably reduced upon letters, and given up upon papers and magazines altogether, without seriously affecting the stability of Uncle Sam.

THE WATSON CONCERT.

We attended this Concert at the Museum, on Tuesday night. The audience was a highly fashionable one, and such as did credit to the occasion. Mrs. Watson sang with inimitable sweetness; and in the "Soldier's Tear," with so much feeling, that we beheld several young ladies fairly melted into tears. Miss Wells sang "The Lords of Creation," with delightful animation, and was encored. The duett of "Matrimonial Discussion," of which we may as well now acknowledge ourself the author, was acted as well as sung, by Miss Wells and Mr. Quayle, and enthusiastically applauded. To gratify the audience it was repeated. Mr. Norton was excellent on the Cornet a Piston. He extracted more genuine music from the instrument, than we believed it capable of. He is an extraordinary player. Mr. Quayle, was uncommonly fine in Glover's Irish air of "The Hour before Day." He deserves praise. We must not forget Mr. Hunt, who was good, and the Minstrels of the Rhrine, who were the same; if we except Mad. Thrun's execution on the Harp, which was really superb.

THE WAY TO DO IT.

The following, from the Raleigh Standard, is an efficient receipe to accomplish the work to which it alludes:

The Way to Break Down the Press.—It has been justly said that an independent press rests on a firmer basis for support than one of a contrary character, and it has been difficult to break down such a press. There is a way in which it can be done, however. And how does the reader think this work can be accomplished? By the telling of all sorts of lies concerning it and its editors? No. By threats? No. By getting bribelings for the special purpose of writing it down? No. By the misconduct of an unprincipled political postmaster? No. But this is the secret. Let a large number of subscribers conclude, that because the business is good, the editor is not in want of the little sums they severally owe; let its friends habitually delay the fulfilment of their promises and contracts with the editor, and the most prosperous establishment in the world will come down at last.

Target Firing.—On Monday afternoon last, the corps of Washington Guys, under the Command of Colonel Childs, turned out for a trial of skill in target firing. The shooting was excellent, forty-two balls out of seventy-four having struck the target, the best shot in the centre of the bull's eye. A beautiful gold medal, containing a profile likeness of Washington, was awarded to Mr. J. B. Clement, Jr. for the best shot. Another gold medal was taken by Samuel Brewer, Jr. for the second best shot, which was in a perpendicular line near the bull's eye. The firing took place on the new parade ground in Moyamensing.

LITERARY.

MR. MOORE'S ALCIPHRON.

We make the following beautiful extracts from Moore's new poem Alciphron, the original of that gorgeous tale the Epicurean. As every body will read it, and scan individually its merits, we need enter into no elaborate critique upon the occasion. The author beside, is so well known and so favorably—his literary character so handsomely established—that, perhaps no remark of ours could influence the popular sentiment, however just or however pertinent, we might make it. We preface the extracts by the following letter from Moore, in relation to the poem.

THE LETTER.

"Some circumstances connected with this new edition, as well as with the poems subjoined to the narrative, seem to require from me a few prefatory words. The idea of calling in the magic pencil of Mr. Turner, to illustrate some of the scenes of the following story, was first suggested by the late Mr. Macrone,—to whose general talents and enterprising spirit all who knew him still bear ready and cordial testimony. His original wish had been that I should undertake for him some new poem, or story, to be thus embellished by the artist. But other tasks and ties having rendered my compliance with this wish impracticable, he proposed to purchase of me the copyright of the Epicurean, for a single 'illustrated' edition; and hence the appearance of the work under its present new auspices and form.

"A few more words remain to be said respecting the poems which occupy a portion of this volume; and which, with the exception of a few fragments of them found scattered through the prose narrative, are here, for the first time, published. My original plan, in commencing the story of the Epicurean, was to write it all in verse, and in the form, as will be seen, of letters from the different personages. But the great difficulty of managing, in rhyme, the minor details of a story, so as to be clear without becoming prosaic, and, still more, the diffuse length to which I saw narration in verse would be likely to run, deterred me from pursuing the plan any further; and I then commenced the tale anew, in its present shape. Whether I was wrong or right, in this change, my readers have now an opportunity of judging for themselves.

"In the Letters of Alciphron will be found,—heightened only by a freer use of poetic colouring,—nearly the same details of events, feelings, and scenery, which occupy the earlier part of the prose narrative. But the Letter of the hypocritical High Priest, whatever else may be its claim to attention, will be found, both in matter and form, new to the reader.

Thomas Moore."

Now follows professedly the most novel portion of the volume, the epistle from Orcus, High Priest of Memphis, to Decius, the praetorian prefect, described above.

"Rejoice, my friend, rejoice.—the youthful Chief
Of that light fleet which mocks at all belief,
And, gay and godless, make the present hour
Its only haven, is now within our power.
Smooth, imposing school!—not all the weapons aimed
At pietistic creeds, since first a crowd was named,
Ever struck so deep as that sly dart they wield,
The Bacchant's pointed spear in laughing flowers concealed.
And oh, 'twere victory to this heart, as sweet
As any then can taste,—even when the feet
Of thy proud war steed wade through Christian blood,
To wrap this scoffer in Faith's blinding hood,
And bring him, tamed and prostrate to implore
The silent god's ev'n Egypt's minute adore.

"What! do these sapes think, to chase alone
The key of this world's happiness is known?
That none but they, who make such proud parade
Of Pleasure's smiling favors, win the maid,
In that Religion keeps no secret place,
No niche, in her dark fanes, for Love to grace?
Fools, indeed they know how been the joys of Heav'n
To earthly joy, when season'd well with heaven;
How Piety's grave mask improves the hue
Of Pleasure's laughing features, half seen through,
And how the Priest, set aptly within reach
Of two rich worlds, tempts for bliss with each.
Would they not, Decius,—thou, whom th' ancient tie
Twixt Sword and Altar makes our best ally,—
Would they not change their creed, their craft, for ours?
Leave the gross daylight joys that, in their bowers,
Languish with too much bliss, like over-blown flowers,
For the veil'd love, that blooms in shade unchiding?
That style dark within the Temple's shade?
And, when not tempting the trim Garden's sadness,—
Where cold Philosophy usurps a rule,
Like the pale moon, k, over paradise leaving fade,
Where Pleasure, cramp'd and chill'd by wisdom's pride,
Counts her own pulse a regulated play,
And in cull dreams describes her life away,—
Be taught by us, quit shadows for th.. true,
Substantial joys we urge Priests pursue,—
We, far too wise to theorize on bliss,
Or pleasure's substance for its shade to miss,
Preach other wealth, but live for only that—
Thanks to the well-paid Mystery rock'd us fast,
Which, like its type, the golden cloud that hung
O'er Jupiter's love-couch its shade brings,
Round human frailty wraps a veil divine.

"Say, is it to be borne, that scoffers rain
Of their own freedom from the nitar's chain,
Should mock than all that time the blood that sold,
And I must not be—thinkest thou that Christian sect,
Whose followers, quick as broken waves, erect
Their crests anew and swell into a tide,
That threats to sweep away our shrines of pride—Think'st thou, with all their wondrous spells, ev'n they Would triumph thus had not the constant play
Of Wit's mischievous archers clear'd their way?—
That mocking spirit, worst of all the foes,
Our sacrosanct fanes or mystic mummeries knows,
Whose wounding lash that ever, along the signs
Of a fast falling creed, pursues its shines,
Threatening such change as do the awful freaks
Of summer lightning, o'er the tempest breaks.

"But, to my point.—a truth of this vain school,
Is one, which Doubt itself hath failed to root
Down to that fleering point, where Priests despair
Of any spark from th' altar catching there.
Hence, then, our hopes, in this, our Athenian, the night
That followed the full Moon's great annual rite,—
Through the dark, winding ducts, that convent stay
To those earth hidden temples, track'd his way,
Just at that hour when, round the Hatine, and in
The chief of assembly, appear'd, then long yet to see,
Sitting their last night broad in the Sanctuary
The dangour of the marvellous feste, that stands
At the Well's inwed depth,—which none but hands
Of new, untaught adventurers, from above,
Who know not the safe path, e'er dare to prove,— Gave signal that a bold profane was nigh.—
'Twas the Greek youth, who, by that morning's sky,
Had been observed, curiously wandering round
The mighty fanes of our sepulchral ground.

"Instant, th' Initiate's Trumpet were prepared,—
The Fire, Air, Water, all that Orpheus dared,
Then Plato, that the bright-hair'd Samian* paved,
With trembling hope, to come to—what, at last?
Go, ask the dupes of Mystery, question him
Who, mid terrific sounds and spectres dim,
Wakes at Eleusis, ask of time, who brave
The dazzling miracles of Mithra's Cave,
With its eternal starry gates; ask all who keep Those terrible night mysteries where they weep
And howl and dance to the answering lotes,
O'er their dead Gods, their mortal Deities,— Amphibious, hybrid things, that died as men
Deem'd, hard'ly capable to rise, as gods again;—
Ask them, what mighty secret lurks below
Thus ev'n fall mortality—can they tell thee? No;
Gravely they keep that only secret, well
And fairly kept,—that they have naught to tell;
And duped themselves outside their humbled pride
By duping thousandfold all mankind beside.

"And such th' advance in fraud since Orpheus' time,—
That earliest master of our craft sublime,—
So many minor Mysteries, imps of fraud,
From the great Orphic Egg have wing'd abroad,
That still th' uphold our Temple's ancient boast,
And seem most holy, we must cheat the most;
Work the best miracles, wrap nonsense round
In pomp and darkness, till it seems profound;
Plan out the hopes, the interest of mankind,
With changeful skill; and make the human mind
Like one of the Sanctuary, who, as we say
But by the Priest's permission, wind its way,—
Where, through the gloom as warm our vision rolls,
Monsters, at will, are conjured into Gods,
While Reason, like a grave-faced mummy stands,
With her arms swathed in hieroglyphic bands.

"Here, at this moment,—all but trials past,
And heart and nerve unshrinking to the last,
The young Initiate force—as yet left free
To wander through this realm of mystery,
Feeding on such illusions as prepare
The soul, like mist over water falls, to wear
All shapes and hues at Fancy's varying will,
Through every shifting aspect, vapor still,— Vague glimpses of the Fallen, visits shown,
By some skill, into that world unknown,
Which saints and sinners claim alike their own;
And all those other witching, wildering arts,
Illusions, terrors, that make human hearts
Alone's the wisest and the hardiest quail
To see gobin throned behind a veil.

"Yes,—such the spell shall haunt his eye, his ear,
Mix with his night-dreams, form his atmosphere;
Till, if our Rage be not tamed down at length
His wit, his wisdom, shorn of all their strength,
Like Phrygian priests in honor of the shrine,
If he become not absolutely mine,
Body and soul, and, like the tame decoy
Which many hunters of wild doves employ,
Draw coivorts also, lure his brother wits
To the dark cage where his own spirit fits.
And give us, if not saints, good hypocrite.—
If I affect not this, then be it said
The sacred spirit of our craft hath fled,
Gone with that serpent god the Cross hath chased
To lose its soul out in the Tholian waste.

* Pythagoras.

"Hunt's Merchants' Magazine."—Freeman Hunt, New York.

We have heretofore neglected to call the attention of our mercantile readers to this useful magazine, but we shall endeavor to atone for our remissness. The November number contains some very valuable articles among which we notice the Lecture on Commercial Integrity, by Judge Hopkinson, and an article on Leisure, by Dr. Bethune, two papers which are well written and well known. There is also a neatly written biographical sketch of the late Matthew Carey, by E. Holden, Esq. The article is marked by the good taste, discrimination, and sound manly sense of the writer, and is interspersed with judicious philosophical reflections, which the whole life of the deceased, was so well calculated to awaken in the mind of a writer, familiar with its varied incidents. There is one passage in the sketch, in which the author takes occasion to condemn the influence of small clique-ism among men of letters, that contains a wholesome rebuke, and we hope that the time is not distant when the press shall cease to be governed by such influences,—and honest criticisms may be generally expected, instead of the mawkish flattery of favorites and friends, and the cold reception and dishonest silence, when unpretending merit is found without the pale. There are some men without virtue or talents who find themselves made famous in a night, while men who have both, are coldly sneered at, and are suffered to struggle through life unnoticed, as those who pull the wires behind the curtain of the press chance to be friends or foes. Such a spirit is neither liberal nor American and should be universally denounced.

A Second Edition of the National Melodies of America, arranged by C. E. Horn, has been published in New York.

Fay's New Novel, The Countess of Ida, is spoken of in warm terms, by those who have read the MSS.

Grand Accession to American History.—Mr. Howard, who had been sent, by the State of Georgia, to England, to procure copies of colonial records relating to the early history of Georgia, has returned, and has placed, says the Message, nineteen MSS volumes, the result of his labors, in the Executive office.

Popular Lectures.

Mercantile Library Company.—David Paul Brown, Esq. delivered a lecture on Friday evening last, before the Mercantile Library Company, at the Musical Fund Hall. His subject was Oratory, and well was it handled. The house has not been as full this season, and the orator must have felt assured that whatever a few envious and contemptible cliques, may profess to think of his talents,—the public, who rarely judge wrong, properly estimate his abilities. The orator was in his happiest mood, and delivered decidedly the best lecture of the season, thus far.

The Athenian Institute.—Joseph R. Ingersoll Esq. gave a lecture on Tuesday evening last, on "The Men and Manners of the Middle Ages." He spoke of the middle ages as eras of great intellectual darkness, and fierce warfare, but instanced some bright exceptions, such as Charlemagne of France, and Alfred of England.

"The lecturer spoke of the scarcity of books, the ignorance of letters pervading all ranks, from the vassal to the prince, from the menial of the church up to the bishops and cardinals; many of whom were unable to write their own names. What little learning there might be was in the ranks of the priesthood, who obtained in consequence, all that sway and importance which superior intellectual knowledge will always command. They became the controllers and directors of the every-day actions of men; they introduced the forms, observances, and signs of religion into all things; and, finally, it became mingled with the avocations of business and pleasure, the occupations of peace and the pursuits of war, and so tinging the general mind with it, that it was a habitual passion rather than a reasonable and discriminating belief.

"This result was followed by another. The religious feeling imparted an elevated romance to the character of the men of the age, moderating their ferocity, and in place of it, inducing a high wrought devotion, almost amounting to idolatry, of women regarding them as superior beings, and making their approbation and smiles the reward of the greatest and most daring exploits. This habit of seeming adoration had also a sublimating effect upon the objects of it; and they would naturally endeavor to deserve it.

"The passion of religion, and the passion of love, produced a refinement, out of which grew the peculiar institution of the middle ages, chivalry. The lecturer spoke of the high sense of honor, the generous hospitality, the cultivation of knightly courtesy, an elevated martial pride directed of savageness, the increased devotion to and importance of women, the general inoculation of virtue as noble, and vice as dishonorable, among the good effects of chivalry, in further civilising the mass of Europe. The magnificence which it introduced, in dress, in banners, and in armor, had also a beneficial influence upon the arts and infant manufacturers of the times. The peculiar ceremonies of initiation into knighthood, and the order and usages of tournaments were particularly described.

He spoke of the Crusades, as growing out of the institution of chivalry. Those expeditions at once gratified the warlike and religious spirits of the age; and though scarcely justifiable, they nevertheless contributed, in no small degree, to add to the stock of general and geographical knowledge, they gave a start to commercial enterprise, caused an intercourse between distant countries to spring, checked (factually the further progress westward of the Saracens, and gave a shock to the feudal system which eventually in the course of time to its total destruction."

He related may anecdotes calculated to illustrate the spirit of the different ages, and some quite amusing ones in reference to the spirit of chivalry. He dwelt with particular force and propriety upon the favors which the ladies were wont to bestow upon the gallant knights of the time, and quoted the remarks of the staid Erasmus in a letter to a friend, to show how generally the feeling was diffused through society. "Did you know" said Erasmus to his friend, "the pleasures which England affords, you would fly here on winged feet, and if your gout would not allow you, you would wish yourself a Dædalus." These lip-favors of the English ladies were certainly commendable, and worthy of all imitation.

Southwark Institute.—We understand from Mr. Flanigen, the President of the Institute, that the 7th anniversary will be celebrated at the 3d Baptist church in Second street above Catharine on Monday evening next, 25th inst. at 7 o'clock. Mr. Gerge Kingsley, together with some of the first medical talent in the city, have kindly volunteered their valuable aid for the occasion. This, with the well known abilities of the gentlemen who are to address the meeting, will contribute to make this one of the most interesting and brilliant celebrations that has taken place for a long time.

FROM HAYTI.

It is stated in the New York Journal of Commerce, on the authority of a correspondent, that the Government of Hayti, is in an unhappy condition. The President, a man of very strong and foolish passions, has quarrelled with the lower branch of the Legislature, because of their attempts to restrain his acts of unconstitutional authority. He, through intrigue, had two of the members expelled. They were subsequently returned again, when, finding the House would not do as he desired, he applied to the Senate, which, being composed of his docile creatures, sanctioned all he ordered them todo. The House refused to submit to these proceedings, and protested against the power of the Senate to pass censure on their conduct. The President passed through the town with his escort, abusing every body whom he suspected of favoring the House, and finally placed a guard at the door of the House of Representatives, to prevent the entrance of the members opposed to his wishes. The House organized under the influence of fear, and a minority of its members—the rest being forced to be silent, from the military force,—pronounced the expulsion of five of its leading members, for not having obeyed the call of the House. They having been driven away by the guard when they presented themselves, a proclamation was issued, forbidding people to talk about what was passing, and attempts of assassination were made on the persons of two of the members that had been so unconstitutionally expelled.

Another Fire in Mobile.—On the margin of the Mobile Journal of the 19th was written:—"A fire broke out about two o'clock this morning in a warehouse in the rear of the Alabama Hotel, and destroyed the warehouse and three or four new one story buildings on St. Francis street. The warehouse had unstacked lime stored in it, which was the cause of the fire."

City News.

Fire.—A fire broke out at the Inclined Plane, Columbia Rail Road, on Thursday morning about 11 o'clock, at the station house at the head of the Inclined Plane, on the river Schuylkill. The building was destroyed and three locomotives consumed. The materials in the house were of a very combustible nature, and were soon destroyed by the devouring element.

A row of brick houses, immediately in the rear of the car-house, was also consumed—the two easternmost were tenanted dwelling houses, the western end was used as a blacksmith shop.

In addition to these, a building used as a carpenter shop was burned down.

The loss to the State is estimated at from twenty to thirty thousand dollars; among other articles of value consumed, was a rope for the use of the Plane, the cost of which was two thousand seven hundred dollars.

Another.—The handsome house of Isaac S. Lloyd, opposite Lemon Hill, was consumed by fire on Friday morning about 4 o'clock.

Yet another.—On the same morning a fire occurred in Dock street below Second, consuming entirely the chair making establishment of Mr. G. W. Donohue.

Fire from a Locomotive.—On Monday last the sparks from the locomotive of the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad set fire to the barn of David Smith, just above the Frankford bridge, which was consumed. It was with the greatest difficulty that the engines and citizens saved his dwelling, standing but a few yards from the barn. Loss stated at between 5 and $600—no insurance.

Dr. T. W. Dyott.—Judges Todd and Bouvier delivered the opinion of the Court on Saturday last, in the case of this individual, who applied for a discharge, on the ground of certain informalities in the organization of the jury before whom he was tried. They stated that "the court, after a cool, patient, and laborious investigation, and consulting the highest authority upon the subject, were decidedly of the opinion that the ground urged did not reach the case of the prisoner, and therefore he was not entitled to his discharge."

We presume the matter will be carried before the Supreme Court, and we strongly suspect the Doctor will succeed in his application.

A Card.—The Messrs. Parkinson have issued a beautiful card of their establishment, engraved with much taste and skill, by Mr. William E. Tucker, who has proved himself as capable to cater for the eye, as are the Messrs. Parkinson to cater for the taste. By the way their ice cream is unequalled.

Terrible Accident.—On Monday evening about dusk, as an old lady, named Margaret Felton, about eighty years of age, and who resides at No. 206 Cherry street, above Ninth, was attempting to cross the street, just at the time that a cart, heavily ladened with sand was passing, when in consequence of not hearing the noise of the approach of the vehicle, owing to her having a handkerchief tied around her ears, she was thrown down, and the cart passed directly over her, severely lacerating her back, breaking both her jaw-bones, and fracturing her skull in several places. She is still alive.

Philadelphia Museum.—J. J. Smith, Esq. is no longer manager of the Philadelphia Museum. His successor is Mr. Campbell, a gentleman it is said, of ability and industry.

Mrs. Watson, and Messrs. Russell and Knight, are all giving concerts at that establishment. Mrs Watson is, however, the "particular star." She is a sweet singer, and a very handsome woman.

Fire.—The alarm of fire on Saturday night, about 12 o'clock, was occasioned by the burning of some combustible materials in the dry goods and fancy store of Mr. Turner, in 2d street, near Chestnut. It was extinguished before any damage was done.

Effects of Liquor.—An individual was accidentally thrown from a cart in Walnut street, on Monday last, and run over, and was so much injured that he died before he could be carried to the Hospital. It appears in evidence before the Coroner, Samuel Heinzelman, Esq. who held an inquest over the body shortly after the accident occurred, that the deceased had been regularly in the habit, for some time past, of indulging immoderately in liquor; and at the time of his being thrown out of the cart, was in a beastly, and almost frenzied state of intoxication. His name was William Buchanan, his age forty-eight years. Another solemn warning for those who cannot take a glass, without levelling themselves with the brute creation!

Schuylkill Navigation.—Statement of the amount of the following articles which arrived at Philadelphia, by the Schuylkill Navigation, from the opening of the same on the 23d of March, to the 1st of November 1839, inclusive.

Arrived at Fairmount.

Coal,	tons	374,444
Flour,	bbls	82,258
Grain,	bush	545,368
Bacon and Lard,	pounds	1,894,250
Iron, kind not named,	do	32,295,731
—— Blooms,	do	2,394,418
—— Castings,	do	1,046,320
—— Nails,	do	3,659,153
Iron Ore,	do	5,863,204
Leather,	do	569,667
Rags,	do	357,100
Sundries,	do	2,806,313
Lime,	do	27,811
Limestone,	do	46,616

IRON-ICAL SERVICE OF PLATE.—Bird Patterson, Esq. of Pottsville, Pa. the proprietor of the Anthracite Furnace, has been presented with a service of plate made from the new iron of the furnace in that borough. It was cast by Messrs. Savery & Co. Anthracite Founders of Philadelphia.

CAUGHT AT LAST.—A burglar of the most daring description has been arrested near Greenbush, opposite Albany, in an old barn, which he had selected in the environs of the town as a depository for his plunder. The officers "removed his deposites."

The Island of Barbadoes contains a population of about 199,000, of which 40,000 are whites and 50,000 blacks.

MAMMOTH PUMPKIN.—S. G. Allen, Esq. of Jersey Shore, Lycoming county, Pa. raised a pumpkin this reason which weighs two hundred and thirteen pounds, and measures six feet in circumference. Mr. Allen also has in his possession an apple tree limb, eighteen inches in length, which contains forty-six beautiful apples!

EXHAUSTLESS SUPPLY OF NATIVE IRON.—The coal-iron-railroad from the Iron Mountain (Mo.) to St. Louis (120 miles) is estimated at 2½ millions of dollars.

The Iron Mountain itself is represented to be about 400 feet in height, and three miles in length, literally covered with bright shining ore, having every appearance of metal which has been smelted. At the base of the mountain the ore is in pieces of a pound weight and upward, but as you approach the apex the pieces increase in size to thousands of tons weight, assuming the appearance of huge rocks, and these immense masses are of a quality superior to any thing of the kind heretofore known.

MAMMOTH BEETS.—The Village Record says: "The largest beet we ever beheld was brought to the Record office a few days ago, by Mr. Curtis James, of Westtown. It was two feet long and 30 inches in circumference, and weighed 27 pounds without the top! Mr. C. has another which is only one pound short of the one brought to the office. Of all esculents, the beet, in the rich soil of Chester county, seems to bring forth the most astonishing yield."

NEW PAPER.—Stephen D. Mackintosh, Esq. who founded a newspaper at our antipodes, at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, "(the Sandwich Island Gazette) and edited with such signal ability, has returned home to America, and gone to St. Louis, Missouri, to establish a paper. It will, we learn from Mr. M. as he passed through here, be free of party politics, and from our knowledge of his tact, quaint humor and originality, we may predict for him complete success.

FISH.—The Detroit papers state that delicious white fish are caught in great abundance in that vicinity.

Political Intelligence.

MASSACHUSETTS.—In Boston, at the recent election, there were were ten split tickets. Each party, by a little management of figures, gives its candidate for Governor a small majority. Nothing definite will probably be known until the publication of offical returns.

MICHIGAN ELECTION.—Judge Woodbridge, the whig candidate for Governor of Michigan, has been elected by 1466 majority. Last year Mason's (dem.) majority was 143. To the Senate there have been elected 8 whigs, 2 dem. To the House, 33 whigs, 13 dem.

HON. J. C. CALHOUN.—The Mobile Advertiser states that Hon. J. C. Calhoun was about to visit Alabama, where his political friends were preparing to welcome him.

GEORGIA.—The inauguration of the Governor of Georgia, Judge McDonald, took place at Milledgeville, on the 6th inst. in the presence of a large concourse of spectators.

GEN. SCOTT.—The New York American, an old and influential whig paper, has come out openly in favor of General Scott, as candidate for the Presidency, in preference to Mr. Clay. It regards the former as more available.

SCOTT AGAIN.—General Scott has been nominated for the Presidency, by the Whigs of Monroe county, New York.

The Whig majority in New York, as officially reported, is 4260.

Naval and Military Affairs.

THE NAVAL LYCEUM at the Brooklyn Navy Yard now comprises a valuable library of 3000 volumes, and a museum of curiosities from every quarter of the world. There is also a collection of portraits of the Presidents of the United States and of our naval heroes.

THE U. S. SHIP VANDALIA, has arrived at Norfolk from Pensacola. She has been absent five years. During the whole of that period, she has been in active service in the West Indies. During this long cruise, says a correspondent of the Norfolk Beacon "none has worked and mutations among the officers and men. All, save one individual, had one after another, "given up the ship;" James Brooke, Esq. her late Purser, alone clung to her up to the moment of her departure from Pensacola—when he was transferred as Purser of that Yard and station, he and Purser White having been permitted by the Department to exchange situations.

This vessel was built at Philadelphia. On her arrival, on Monday, and after she had anchored off Town Point, Capt. Levy, her commander, sent a messenger ashore to the Mayor, announcing his desire to salute the town; and receiving from that officer, an assurance that it should be returned, a salute was accordingly fired by the Vandalia, which was returned yesterday, at 12 o'clock, by the Norfolk Light Artillery Blues.

SHIPS OF WAR.—On the 24 inst. the Erie and Levant sloops of War went down from Pensacola, and the Macedonian and the French frigate La Gloire the day after. The Ontario was the only Man of War at Pensacola, except the French brig Dunois.

NAVAL.—A detachment of 30 U. S. seamen, intended for the schooner Flirt, arrived at Baltimore from Norfolk, on Thursday. The Flirt is stated to be a vessel of most beautiful model, and built to great credit to the skill and reputation of our ship builders. She will, as soon as she is ready, be commanded by Lieut. McLaughlin, and will sail for the Florida coast, where she will be employed during the winter in aiding the United States troops in that quarter.

Personal Items.

MAJOR NOAH is endeavoring to get up a theatrical fund, for the benefit of decayed actors.

MR. CRARY.—The Detroit Free Press states that the Hon Isaac E. Crary, member of Congress, from Michigan, lies seriously ill at his residence in Marshall.

REV. MR. PIERPONT, of Boston, has been recalled to the Hollis Street Church.

COMMENDABLE.—The private property of Mr. Read, the President of the Erie Bank, has been pledged by law, for the redemption of all debts and demands against the institution.

REV. MR. BATLES, a Presbyterian clergyman of Maryland, has determined to locate in Texas.

JAMES ASHMEAD, JR. Esq. has been elected President of the Germantown Lyceum.

AMERICA VESPUCCI is sojourning at the Tremont House, Boston.

DEATH AT A PRAYER MEETING.—Mary Ann Howard fell from her chair while attending a prayer meeting, in New York, on Friday evening, and instantly expired. She was sitting quietly, and apparently in good health—verdict death by apoplexy.

Mr. Wallack, after losing $5000, has been compelled to close the National Theatre, N. Y.

Mr. Mackenzie has issued another number of his Gazette.

Financial Record.

THE BANK OF THE UNITED STATES.—This institution has sent a detailed statement of its affairs to the Auditor General, at Harrisburg. It would, as we learn, have been sent before, but that it could not be made out so rapidly and promptly as some desired. The statement has not yet reached Philadelphia, but is said to be highly favorable. We shall publish it at length in our next.

SPECIE COMING.—The ship Adelaide which arrived at this port on Saturday last, 16th inst. had on board one hundred thousand dollars in specie for the Bank of the United States. We take to chronicle such imports.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.—It is confidently predicted, that the banks of this city will resume specie payments on the 7th of January next, on which day the ninety days allowed them by law, will expire.

NOT COMMON.—The Mobile Advertiser of the 6th says that the Mobile Bank, with $250,000 in specie, has a circulation of only $80,000.

A NEW BANK.—The project of establishing a Hamilton Bank at Baltimore, has been abandoned for the present.

THE BANK OF PENSACOLA has suspended specie payments.

TEXAN LOAN.—The New Orleans Bulletin states that the Texan loan of $5,000,000 has been negotiated in England, at 8 per cent. interest per annum, payable annually, and redeemable in thirty years.

STATE OF MARYLAND vs. SHINPLASTERS.—A suit was brought, at Baltimore, against Mauldin Perine, treasurer of the Western Mechanics' Savings Institution, for issuing small notes of a less denomination than five dollars. It is the intention of the Attorney General of the State, if the judgment of the Court sustains the State in the prosecution, to enter suits, forthwith, against every bank, banking institution and person thus violating a statute of the State in such case made and provided. By the by, there is an attempt making to put Baltimore $1 shinplasters afloat in this city. Beware of them.

MONEY AFFAIRS IN NEW YORK.—The New York Money Market is somewhat easier.—After several months of constant strain on our Banks, says the Express, we have at length an appearance of a change. The Exchange being in favor of the country, our banks are no longer drained of specie, and they are relieved from all fears of any heavy drafts on them. They consequently begin to discount more freely.

RICHMOND.—The Richmond Compiler says: The times are tight but free from panic. Money is scarce, and the Banks discount with caution. Exchange on New York is difficult to obtain at all, and occasions our greatest source of embarrassment.

CANADA RESUMPTION.—The Banks of Upper Canada have resumed specie payments under an act of the Legislature, which authorises them to pay out English silver at a rate compared with our currency of one shilling for twenty-five cents. This amounts to a debasement of Canada currency to the extent of ten or twelve per cent. This measure was adopted, we are told, for the purpose of preventing the Banks from being called on for specie, and so keep the coin at home.

THE WESTERN BANKS.—There are forty-two Safety Fund Banks and two branches, located west of Albany. Statements from all but seven of these were furnished to the Bank Commissioners at Auburn, during the last week. Their condition, as compared with the first of January last, is as follows:

	37 Banks	Capital Loans & disc't	Circul'n
1st Jan. 1839,	7,640,000	14,105,934	6,038,569
5th Nov. 1839,	7,640,000	13,321,846	4,945,194

It is known that the circulation of the River and city banks has decreased in a still greater proportion.

BANK CHARTERS IN OHIO.—The following table in relation the periods at which the charters of the various banks of Ohio will expire, is not without interest.

Miami Ex. Com.	1843	Zanesville	1843
Marietta	43	Franklin Cincinnati	43
Chillicothe	43	Wooster	50
Steubenville	43	do. German	43
Muskingum	43	Massillon	55
West Union	43	Xenia	50
Far. & Mec. Cincinnati	43	New Lisbon	43
Far. & Mec. Steubenville	43	Lafayette Cincinnati	43
Scioto	43	Circleville	55
Canton	43	Sandusky	50
Gallipolis	43	Clinton, Columbus	50
Circleville	43	Ohio Life & Trust
Little Miami Canal Bank	43	Co.	perpetual
Urbana	43	Granville	do.
St. Clairsville	43	Dayton	43
Geauga	41	Lancaster	43
Cincinnati Commercial Bank	44	Franklin, Columbus	43
Norwalk	50	Lake Erie	43
The Ohio Life and Trust Company will be		Cleveland	54
		Mount Pleasant	43
		Hamilton	43

subject to legislation, we believe, in 1843.

A TOUGHER.—Specie, says the New York Journal of Commerce, "comes faster and faster, and is less and less desired by our banks. Twenty thousand dollars was offered one of them in dispost yesterday morning. The cashier shook his head, and, not to be rude, opened his vault door and showed his heap, saying, 'there is more than we want.'"

CINCINNATI BANKS.—The banks of Cincinnati, receive and pay out at par, the notes of Indiana, and Kentucky banks, which they previously refused altogether, or received at a discount. The Cincinnati Gazette of the 12th has the following:

The resumption of specie payments by our banks has not been attended with any run upon them. It is looked upon, as it really is, as a matter of necessity, and has been entirely without effect upon our money market.

NEW COUNTERFEITS.—Frederick County Bank, Frederick, Md.—1's altered to 10's. The genuine 1's have for a Vignette—figure of a female kneeling, with a sickle in one hand, and a sheaf of wheat in the other. The spurious 10's have the same, and by a slight examination can be easily detected.

Bank of Pittsburgh, at Pittsburgh, Pa.—20's spurious—letter C. dated Jany. 1, 1839, (other various dates, and payable to different persons,) payable to E. Woods. They have for a vignette, a female leaning on an urn filled with flowers. The genuine 20's have for a vignette a blacksmith seated on an anvil, surrounded by his implements of trade.

Commercial Bank of Lake Erie, Cleveland, O.—10's spurious—vignette—Genius of Liberty reclining on the arms of Ohio. Leonard Case, President, T. P. Handy, Cashier.

Butchers, and Drovers, Bank, New York.—20's altered from 2's. In the true twenty dollar bills, the words "the Butchers' and Drovers' Bank" are in capitals in a semi-circle on the head of the bill, and the vignette representing cattle, is on the left hand margin; whereas in threes, altered, the words, "Butchers' and Drovers' Bank" are in a straight line in the centre of the bill, and the vignette representing cattle is on the head of the bill.

City Bank, New York.—5's let B b (in German Text) payable to E. Hall, dated Oct. 1 1838, signed G. A. Worth, cashier, and Daniel Wright, President. Vignette, two steamboats—on the right margin, Locomotive, &c.—on the left, medallion head of Dewitt Clinton. Paper white and thin, and whole appearance faint and bad. Purport to be engraved by Draper, Underwood, Bald & Spencer.

Planter's Bank of New Orleans, at N. Orleans—No such Bank in existence.—Reporter.

WASHINGTON BANKING COMPANY.—The failure of the Washington Bank, New York—one of the institutions organised under the general banking law—was upon a note for $23,000 given to the N. A. Trust and Banking Company, in payment for $25,000 Arkansas stock, which was deposited with the late Comptroller, Mr. Flagg, as security for the issues of the Washington Bank.

The News, published at St. Augustine says, "It is a matter of gratulation to announce, as well as evidence of the skilful management of the interests of the Southern Life & Trust Company, that amid the almost general suspension of specie payment, it is enabled to meet all of its issues by a prompt redemption.

GEORGIA BANKS.—Gov. Gilmore, of Geo. devotes a part of his opening message to the Legislature, to the Banking Institutions. In regard to the suspension, he says that "if permitted to go unnoticed, by the Legislature, it will tend to produce an insecurity and vacillation in bank issues and credit, effecting most injuriously the relation of debtor and creditor, and the general wealth and prosperity of the community. The conduct of many of the banks, he thinks, shows the slight control which the obligation to perform their contracts has over them, and the probability that they will use the opportunity which the suspension gives them, of making profit from it, unless restrained by efficient laws.

It is believed that the Great Western did not take out one thousand dollars in specie, on Saturday last.

RHODE ISLAND.—The New York American says, that about one-half of the banks in Providence, have determined to resume specie payments provided that a majority of all the banks in the city will join them.

BOSTON MONEY MATTERS.—The Boston Advertiser says, money continues scarce and high in the street, but it should be remarked to the credit of the banks, that they are constantly discounting for their regular customers to the extent of their available means, as far as their own safety will allow. The consequence is, that an immense amount of relief is in this way afforded to the mercantile community generally, and it is the aid derived from this source, which enables the merchants of this city to meet their engagements promptly, in the midst of so much derangement and perplexity of money affairs. What is done in the streets is at the highest rate which money lenders can obtain. The direct tendency which the present scarcity of money and derangement of exchanges has to check business, is too generally known to require comment.

NEW BANK.—An institution has been organized at Buffalo under the general banking law, having for its name—"The Western Agency Bank," E. G. Spalding and others associates. At a meeting of the directors held 9 ventber 8th, E. G. Spalding, Esq. was elected president and John R. Lee, cashier. The institution goes into operation immediately.

SPECIE.—The Pittsburgh Gazette says: "We have the best authority for asserting that the whole reduction of specie in the Pittsburgh Bank, in near six weeks, is about eleven thousand dollars. Two weeks ago, the reduction was a little over fourteen thousand; but since then, the amount of specie has been gradually increasing."

INDIAN NEWS.

FROM ST. AUGUSTINE.—We gather the following from the Charleston Courier of Monday last:

St. Augustine, Nov. 8.

On Sunday last, the 3d November, a baggage wagon, with an escort of seven men, proceeding from Fort Micanopy to Fort Wheelock, was fired upon by a party of 50 Indians, killing 3 mules, 1 horse, and wounding 2 others. The teamster was mortally wounded, and a private named Bosso, was very severely so. The firing being heard at Fort Micanopy, a relief was sent out, but before they came up to the ground, the Indians had succeeded in plundering the wagon of tents, powder, provisions, &c. and made their escape.

We learn by the arrival of the schr. Medium, Captain Magee, from Key Biscayne, that the wounded Indian, who some time since went into Fort Lauderdale for medical assistance, has informed Major Childs that Coacoochee has placed the women and children in the Pahkaokee, or grass water, for security; and that he is prepared for a vigorous defence of himself and followers. On the accession of troops, sufficiently strong to reinforce those now South, the Indian offers to take them to Coacoochee's ground of defence.

Commander Mayo, of the U. States steamer Poinsett, has gone into the everglades, with 50 men.

FLORIDA.—Four Indians came into Tampa on the 26th ult. with white feathers in their turbans, as a symbol of peace, for the purpose of holding a talk with the commanding officer.—They were immediately confined in the block house, as prisoners. One of them, it is believed, fired the evening before at an express rider, about twenty miles from the post, but missed him.

Gleanings from Foreign Papers.

BRITISH NATIONAL DEBT.—Blackwood's Magazine states, that the Tory Government in the space of fifteen years after the Battle of Waterloo, had paid off eighty millions sterling of the debt; reducing it from 865 millions, to 785 millions. And that the Whig Government has increased the debt a million a year during the eight years of its administration. The writer prophesies that the change in the Post Office Law will produce a further deficit of one million a year, so that hereafter the yearly increase of debt will be two millions sterling.

It is stated that if the taxes had been kept up to the standard of 1815, there would now have been paid off 400 millions of the debt; nearly one half.

By a statistical table in the same article we perceive that the population of Great Britain and Ireland has increased in 24 years, from 19 to 27 millions.

BRITISH DUTIES ON BREAD STUFFS.—The following table, copied from Elliott's British Tariff, and showing the rate of duty imposed in England on foreign wheat and flour, possesses interest at this time:

Whenever the average price of British Wheat shall be per qr.

	Duty per qr. s.	£. s. d.	Duty per bbl. flour of 196 lbs. £. s. d.
	1	0	0
at 40	2	6	8
50	1	16	8
60	1	6	8
65	1	1	8
66	1	0	8
67	18	1	11
68	16	8	10
69	13	8	8
70	10	8	6
71	6	8	4
72	3	8	1
and above 73	1	0	1

Wheat, the produce of Canada or the British possessions, is 5s. per quarter duty when the average price of British wheat is under 67s. at over that price the duty is 6d. the quarter or eight bushels.

A LION TAMED.—It is stated in a Paris paper that Van Amburg had tamed the lion sent as a present to Gen. Jackson, in four days. The story runs that the laws of this country forbidding the President to receive presents from a royal cotemporary, the animal was sold, and was taken in all his native ferocity to Paris, and introduced to Van Amburg for the first time. That intrepid individual having determined publicly to enter the cage, the prefecture of police grew very much alarmed and insisted upon a previous experiment, so as to be satisfied that no damage would result from so hazardous an experiment; that on the public exhibition he was astonishingly successful, and two thousand spectators, who winessed it, were raised to an indescribable pitch of anxiety and terror, only to be succeeded by admiration at the boldness and courage of the feat.

FROM MONTEVIDEO.—The Boston Courier of Friday last says: Captain Read of the brig Russian, arrived last evening from Montevideo, states that the country remained in the same disordered state as heretofore. The troops of Entre Rios sent forward by Rosas to countenance any movement in favor of Oribe, the late deposed President, to the amount of 5000 or 6000, were within about three days march of Montevideo, but no attack was immediately intended. Frutos Riviera, the acting President of the Banda Oriental, was in the interior, with about 2000 troops, encamped at a short distance from the Entre Rios troops, and watching their movements. Several small parties had collected to depose Rivera, but had been dispersed by the troops of the government. The French squadron was taking in three months provision, in anticipation of Montevideo being besieged, and it was stated that they intended to land 1000 troops to garrison that city.

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Published every Saturday, by

DU SOLLE & GRAHAM,

No. 36 Carter's Alley,

Third door below Third street, near the Circuit Court

TERMS—$2 00, if not paid during the year.

$1 50, if paid in advance.

$1 25, for six months.

Payable in Philadelphia without discount or charge. Papers discontinued only at the option of the publishers while arrearages are due.

ERRATUM.—In our last number, we gave place to an article by J. F. Caldwell, Esq. on Dental Surgery, and by oversight, permitted an important error in its phraseology to go uncorrected. Instead of "the teeth naturally tend to impugn" read "impinge upon, and support each other" and the sense to its appropriate dress will be apparent.

SHORT AND SWEET.—We hope that our subscriber will excuse us, but his letter is so good an example, that we cannot help laying it before our readers:

Vineanes, Ia. 6th Nov. 1839.

$2 for Sat. Eve. Post for 1840.

Cr. L. L. WATSON.

Reader! "Go thou and do likewise."

☞ Our thanks are due D. A. BULKLEY, Esq. of Jacksonville, Illinois, for the prompt and efficient manner in which he is performing the duties of an agent.

INFORMATION WANTED of H. Wright, A. J. McCall, L. Abbott, of Hamilton College, N. J. such due two years to this office. We are determined that hereafter all defaulters shall be exposed.

Of Wm. Bull, late of Wortington, Ohio.
Of A. Lochler, late of Lancaster, Pa.

☞ Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR, whom we noticed some weeks since, as indebted to us, has called on us, and states that he left Bloomsbury, New Jersey, a year since, and notified the Post Master to order a discontinuance, which was neglected. We are happy to say that he called, paid for the paper, and entered his name for the ensuing year.

We regret that the mistake should have occured, but we are determined in every instance, to make a public exposure where the circumstances warrant it. If we do wrong to any, we shall, as in the case of Mr. Taylor, make the correction.

☞ F. M. CAPENHART, of Murfreesboro', N. C. is no longer the agent of this paper, or of the Casket and Philadelphia Monthly Magazine, and subscribers of either at that, or any other place, are requested not to pay any money to him on our account.

REVIEW OF THE MARKET, FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 21, 1839.

Revenue.—The receipts of Revenue have been heavy this week. Dealers continue to purchase sparingly, and the stock of goods on hand, of almost all kinds is very light. There has been a considerable inquiry for money of late, and the very limited operations of the few past months induce a belief that in a short time all difficulties will be worked through, and money once more be at reasonable rates.

Bark.—The operation in Quercitron reach to about 150 hhds. at $46 a ton, at which price we quote the market heavy and no disposition on the part of buyers to operate to it. Sales have been made of Spanish Oar at $15, and of Peach at $9.

Coffee.—The operations in Coffee during the past week, have been limited and confined to small lots. Among them we notice 104 bags St. Jago at 10a11c. and 700 of Rio, in parcels, at 11a12c. principally however at 11a11½c.

Flour and Meal.—Considering the light stock on hand, the sales of the past week have been active and to a fair extent. They amount to near 5000 barrels, almost all of which has been taken for export. The price has been chiefly $6.25, though in the early part of the week a few hundred barrels sold at $6.12½, and a small lot sold as high as $6.50. The market however immediately gave way to $6.25 at which price it has since ruled, and we quote it as offered at that price. The stock on hand is chiefly held by the few state of the water preventing the mills from grinding.

Considerable sales of Corn Meal have been made at $4 in barrels, at which price it is still held. In bbls we quote the price at $17.

Grain.—The arrivals have been light during the past week. Corn has still further declined in price, and sales of old Yellow have been made at 65c. a 67c. of White at 63c.; New commands 55c. In Rye nothing is doing; it is held nominally at 70c. Sales of Oats at 31 a 32c.—Wheat is coming in slowly, and sales of Southern are at about $1.19 a 1.20, and of Pennsylvania on the Canal at $1.15 a 1.17. Flaxseed is held at $1.16

Hemp—Continues dull and the transactions in all kinds are very limited. We note a small sale of Italian at $210.

Molasses.—The transactions are heavier than they have been for some weeks past, though still limited. We hear of sales of 150 hhds Trinidad at 31 a 32c, and of 42 Matanzas at 30 a 31c.

Naval Stores—Continue without any change, and demand is for small lots, except Spirits of Turpentine, of which the sales have been fair at 34c.

Oils—We have no change to note in either price or demand since our last.

Provisions.—The stock is much reduced and operations limited. We quote for a good article of Mess Pork, $16, as a fair rate. Sales of Prime at 11¼ a 12¼. Hams 8 a 10½, Shoulders 6½ a 7, Sides 7 a 8.

Rice—Small sales at 4 a 4½, according to quality.

Sugars.—There is good demand for a fair article, the stock in this market being confined almost exclusively to common qualities. We note sales of 500 boxes Cuba Browns at 8 a 8½, 100 hhds and 300 bbls common St. Jago at 7½ a 8½; a few bbls Porto Rico interior at 7cts.

Tobacco.—Operations are limited and without any change in prices.

CATTLE MARKET.—Beeves.—The arrivals at Johns' Union Drove Yard, Ridge Road, amount to 150 head at Moody's market, and 246 yesterday. The sales were extremely dull, and prices ranged from as low as $6 to $8. Full 200 head were left over.

Cows and Calves.—The arrivals at Thompson's Yard Callowhill street, amounted at the two market days, Saturday and Wednesday, to 170 head, which ranged from $23 to $40—extra $45. Sales dull.

Hogs.—Full 500 head at Thompson's Yard, and 64 at Johns'. Sales at from $6.50 to $7.50.

Sheep.—The stock of common sheep is abundant, and sales dull at from $1.50 to $3.75.

HAY AND STRAW MARKET.—Hay.—Best Timothy brings $16 per ton—other sorts in proportion.

Straw.—Good Rye commands $7.50 per 100 bundles.—North American.

STRANGE ACCIDENT.—Mr. Timothy Caldwell, of Staunton, (Va.) on Friday week, in the act of slaughtering a beef, stabbed himself in the thigh and bled to death in a few minutes.

☞ Agents will please endorse their letters, and Post masters frank in full. To constitute a frank, it is necessary to write the name of the Post Master in full, and the word "free" also.☞

RECEIPTS BY MAIL.

Nov. 15, received from

S. H. South,	$2 00
Ichabod I. Watson,	2 00
E. H. Garwood, Esq.	2 00
Charles Ward,	5 00
Geo. E. Craig,	2 00
E. Coleen, Esq.	2 00
Jacob Mauger,	5 00
Nov. 16.
A. W. Danby, Esq.	6 00
R. Barnes, Esq.	4 00
L. H. Kistler,	9 00
J. S. Wynne, Esq.	2 00
C. H. W. Talfery,	2 00
Jacob W. Walter,	3 00
L. L. Watson,	2 00
D. Whitmore, agt.	20 00
J. Kevill, Esq.	5 00
I. Russell, Esq.	2 00
S. S. Phelps, Esq.	5 00
A. H. Halbert, Esq.	2 00
Nov. 18.
A. Tuston, Esq.	10 00
Nov. 18, received from
C. Blush, Esq.	2 00
Joseph Dickson,	1 00
P. P. Hubbell, Esq.	2 00
E. Ely, Esq.	2 00
I. F. Easton, agt.	100 00
A. G. Spalding, Esq.	2 00
Nov. 19.
D. H. Y. Moss, Esq.	1 00
John Cooper, Esq.	8 00
Wm. Lapier,	2 00
H. M. Godden, Esq.	5 00
C. N. B. Knapp, agt.	15 00
W. B. Grayson,	10 00
C. Carter,	6 00
I. E. Holbrook,	2 00
A. Pahnet, Esq.	2 00
Ira Stower,	2 00
Nov. 20.
B. Catlin,	2 00
H. P. Mabry,	5 00
D. S. Green,	3 00
J. J. W. Donell, Esq.	4 00

PHILADELPHIA MUSEUM

MR. COLEMAN'S BENEFIT CONCERT

THIS EVENING, Nov. 23—Mr. C will be assisted by the following Artists, Mrs. Watson, Miss Clarence Wells, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Guayle, and Mr. Watson.

ELECTRO MAGNETISM—The Concert is postponed till o'clock, to give visitors an opportunity for an evening inspection of the Electro Magnetic Rail-road in the centre of the Saloon, constructed to carry passengers.

PART I.

BALLAD—Mr. Guayle, "Lassie would ye love me?" BALLAD—Miss Wells, "I will not chide the Archer Boy;" SONG—Mr. Hunt, NEW SONG—Mrs. Watson, "Love in a Cabin;" GRAND FANTASIA—Accordion, with the Favorite Piece of "The Flag of Liberty floats free," and new Variations, never attempted by any other but himself, SONG—Mr. Guayle, "My Normandie;" SONG—Miss Wells, "Teach me to Forget;" SONG—Mrs. Watson, "Away to the mountain's brow;" DUETT—Miss Wells and Mr. Guayle, from the opera of the National Guard, "Come, dearest, come."

PART II.

DUETT—Mrs. Watson and Mr. Hunt, from the opera of La Sonnambula, "Take this Ring, tis thine Love," and "Oh, I cannot give expression;" BALLAD—Miss Wells, "Why don't the men propose, mamma?"—FANTASIA—Mr. Coleman on the Accordion; SONG—Mr. Hunt, NEW SONG—Mrs. Watson, "To the Woods away;" NEW ROMANCE—Mr. Guayle, "The Hour before Day;" SONG—Miss Wells, "Now isn't it a pity?" COMIC DUETT—Matrimonial Discussion on Dress, between Mr. and Mrs. Jones," by Miss Wells and Mr. Guayle, written by a gentleman of this city. THE LAUGHING FINALE—Mrs. Watson, Miss Wells, Mr. Hunt, and Mr. Guayle, "Valzas va di qua."

Tickets TWENTY FIVE CENTS—or if purchased previous to the evening, five for One Dollar.

Concert to commence at eight o'clock, precisely.

☞ REMOVAL.—DR. WM. EVANS has removed his OFFICE in Philadelphia for the sale of his CHAMOMILE and APERIENT PILLS, and EVANS'S SOOTHING SYRUP, for Children Teething, to No. 3 SOUTH REFLECTOR CORNER OF MARKET STREET, where all business connected with the sale of his Medicines will in future be transacted; and where the above medicine may always be had Gratis. WM. EVANS, M. D.

N. B.—The principal Office is at No. 3 Bowne Street, New York, where communications, by letter, are requested to be made direct.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS!—As there is a deleterious imitation of my GENUINE CHAMOMILE AND APERIENT PILLS in the market, the patrons of my medicines are requested to obtain their supplies at my Office, No. 3 Bowne Street, New York, or No. 3 SOUTH REFLECTOR CORNER OF MARKET ST. PHILADELPHIA, and to be particular in every instance to observe that the label on each Bottle, Box and Package, has the following notice, viz. "Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1839, by William Evans, in the clerk's office of the Eastern District Court of New York." ALL OTHERS ARE COUNTERFEITS.

No. 3 South Seventh Street, near the corner of Market.

DR. EVANS'S ONLY OFFICE IN PHILADELPHIA for the sale of his Genuine CHAMOMILE PILLS.

nov 23—3t WM. EVANS, M. D.

THE WEEKLY LEDGER—is a newspaper of large size, stored with choice articles, condensed and clipped of all redundancy of expression, in order to present the greatest amount of information in the fewest words. Every item of news foreign and domestic; accounts of general interest; legislative proceedings; reports of trials; remarkable police cases; observations on matters and things; strictures on humbug, quackery, and imposition, of every kind; scientific intelligence; new inventions, discoveries and improvements in the arts; practical essays and remarks on the management of farm, stock, gardens, dairies, &c. under this head, much rare and important information respecting the cultivation of the morus multicaulis, Sohan Potato and sugar beet; literary and miscellaneous articles, such as tales, poetry, &c.—These, we think, are what a newspaper should have, will be constantly found in the Weekly Ledger. The popularity and success of our paper, are almost unequaled in this country, and it is merely necessary that the attractions of the WEEKLY should be generally known to make it equally popular and successful. The circulation is already very extensive and is rapidly increasing.

TERMS—$2 per annum, or $1.25 for six months, payable in advance, invariably.

Postmasters procuring our subscriptions will receive attention if directed to

SWAIN, ARELL & SIMMONS, Publishers,

nov 23—3t Corner of Dock and 3d Sts. Philada.

TRUE POMADE DIVINE. The great usefulness of this most excellent remedy is now so well known to all who have applied it, that no encomium is necessary. One trial will prove its efficacy.

It is used in all CUTANEOUS ERUPTIONS, quickly removes DARTRES, and by steady perseverance the Scald Head, obstinate and long fixed complaints have been eradicated when all other means have failed. Instances of the most singular cures could be adduced.

It cures CHAPPED HANDS and LIPS, SCURVY, and SCALDS, BURNS, STINGS and all sorts of BRUISES, when falls or otherwise; SHIFT NECK, SWELLING OF THE GLANDS, and will greatly relieve RHEUMATIC and GOUTY PAINS, fixed in any part. It is an excellent dressing for a BLISTER, removes the CHAFING of INFANTS, and is invaluable for SORE NIPPLES, particularly in lying in, its subduing effects in that very trying case should be universally known. It is useful for a CANCER, before it is broken, for a GUNSHOT, meeting a little into the wound, for PAINS in the PERINEUM, well rubbed in before the fire for the PILES, and will prevent a FISTULA. As little be well rubbed in for a firm application in a BRUISE or FRACTURE will prevent inflammation. It is of great benefit to those afflicted with CORNS, and is invaluable for FROSTED FEET. It will prevent any inconvenience from the effect of cold weather, and will keep the HANDS and FEET perfectly PLIABLE, very much to the comfort of those who are exposed to the severe cold. It is a excellent dressing for a BLISTER, removes the CHAFING of INFANTS, and is invaluable for SORE NIPPLES, particularly in lying in, its subduing effects in that very trying case should be universally known. It is useful for a CANCER, before it is broken, for a GUNSHOT, meeting a little into the wound, for PAINS in the PERINEUM, well rubbed in before the fire for the PILES, and will prevent a FISTULA. As little be well rubbed in for a firm application in a BRUISE or FRACTURE will prevent inflammation. It is of great benefit to those afflicted with CORNS, and is invaluable for FROSTED FEET. It will prevent any inconvenience from the effect of cold weather, and will keep the HANDS and FEET perfectly PLIABLE, very much to the comfort of those who are exposed to the severe cold. The delicacy of its fragrance renders it most agreeable. It is prepared with great care from BALSAMIC ESSENCES, and is carefully put up in the neatest manner, and warranted not to contain a particle of any injurious ingredient; it will retain its virtues many years in any climate, and is therefore useful to Travellers.

In glasses with full directions price 25 and 50 cents, by R. PENN; 12 SOUTH THIRD St. Philadelphia.

and in every city in the United States.

☞ Look for the signature of R. Penn on the wrapper. Without this signature on the label. A liberal allowance to Agents. oct 19—6m

PERMANENT CURE of a case of PULMONARY CONSUMPTION BY DR. HIGBEE'S REMEDY. A copy of a letter to the following testimonial from Miss Haviland, will show the effects of Dr. Higbee's extraordinary medicine in consumptive cases. In the last intelligence received from Miss Haviland, only a few days since, we are informed that she continues entirely free from all symptoms of pulmonary disease, so that more than four years have elapsed since her recovery, without any return of the complaint. Her certificate, as it will be seen, bears the date of August 10, 1835.

NEW HANOVER Burlington Co. N. J.
Aug. 10th, 1835.

I do hereby certify, that I have been for many years affected with cough and pain in the Breast, attended with expectoration of large quantities of blood and matter from my lungs, and I finally became so bad as to be confined to my bed. I had tactic fever, with slight sweats, diarrhoea, great emaciation, constant cough and every one was so much alarmed that I was in the last stage of consumption, and had no expectation that I would be any better. I was attended by Dr. H. Higbee, and through the medicine prepared and prescribed by him, I was restored to health from my apparently desperate situation, and have since had no return of the pulmonary symptoms.

LYDIA HAVILAND.

OBSERVE!—Dr. Higbee's Remedy, though not offered as a specific for all diseases, yet for many years past, with unprecedented success in cases of Pulmonary Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Bronchitis, Liver Complaints, Diseases of the Spleen, Whooping Cough, Colds, &c. &c. and has gained a reputation unequaled in the history of medicine. Dr. Higbee is a regular graduate, a graduate of Jefferson College in this city, and has practised in his profession for the last eleven years with very great success. His medicine is mild, pleasant, and safe, under all circumstances. It may be obtained at his office, No. 32 NORTH FIFTH street, below Race street, with ample printed directions for use. Price $1 per bottle, or six per half dozen.

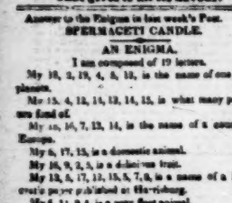
Also, of Joseph Scott, Wilmington, Delaware. Jones Wister's Music Store, Lancaster, Pa.

BECK & BRADLEY, Norristown, Pa. nov 2—6m

☞ ATTENTION BALD HEADS. NO APOLOGY FOR the Which Of all the domestic compounds invented for the restoration and preservation of the HAIR, nothing has been found equal to the ALBERTINE OR VEGETABLE HAIR TONIC. It seldom fails to restore the hair to health and beauty. Many who were bald a few months ago, can now exhibit luxuriant heads of hair by the use of it.

Copy of a letter from Dr. S. S. Fitch.

Dr. Jayne—Dear Sir—I feel that I can hardly say enough to you in favor of Albert's Otaghinan Hair Tonic, prepared by you. My hair had been falling out for two years, and had become very thin, thre



Variety's the Spice of Life,
That gives it all its flavour.

Answer to the Enigma in last week's Post.
SPERMACETI CANDLE.

AN ENIGMA.

I am composed of 19 letters.

My 10, 5, 19, 4, 8, 13, is the name of one of the planets.

My 15, 4, 12, 14, 12, 14, 15, is what many persons are fond of.

My 16, 16, 7, 12, 14, is the name of a country in Europe.

My 6, 17, 15, is a domestic animal.

My 16, 9, 2, 5, is a delicious fruit.

My 13, 5, 17, 13, 15, 5, 7, 8, is a name of a Democrat's paper published at Harrisburg.

My 6, 11, 9, 5, is a very fast animal.

My 13, 14, 6, 13, 5, 13, 7, is the name of one of the States of the Union.

My 8, 17, 2, 6, 18, is useful in all countries.

My 6, 7, 10, 13, 6, is a man's christian name.

My 5, 9, 2, 6, 13, 14, 15, is a town in Pennsylvania.

My 17, 16, 17, 5, 19, 17, is the name of a town in the west of Portugal.

My 14, 5, 10, 13, 12, 15, is a distinguished writer.

My 13, 13, 12, is the name of a liquor.

My 8, 4, 15, 11, 5, is a tool used by carpenters.

My 7, 4, 15, 4, 1, 19, is the name of one of our months.

My 6, 5, 13, 1, 8, is the name of a spring flower.

My 16, 9, 13, is the name of a very useful article in writing.

My 13, 5, 17, 12, is a very useful metal.

My whole is the name of a weekly paper published in this city.

Of all things, never may I become that despicable thing, a woman living upon admiration! The village matron, tidying up for her husband and children at evening, is far, far more enviable and respectable.—Mrs. Hemans.

A COMPLIMENT QUIZZED.—A gentleman walking in the fields with a lady, picked a blue bell, and taking out his pencil wrote the following lines, which, with the flower, he presented to the lady:

"This pretty flower, of heavenly hue
Must surely be allied to you.
For you, dear girl, are heavenly too."

To which the lady replied:—

"If, sir, your compliment be true,
I'm sorry that I look so blue."

REASONABLE COMPLAINT.—The only prisoner in Nantucket jail has given the sheriff notice that unless the prison is repaired so as to guard him from the inclemency of the weather, he cannot remain much longer.

MATERIALS OF POETRY.—Good sense is the body of poetic genius, fancy it drapery, motion its life, and imagination the soul that is every where and in each, and forms all into one graceful and intelligent whole.

REFLECTION.

No glass can Habbouse face reflect,
As truly seen, alas!
For if we must the truth respect,
His face reflects the glass.

EPITAPH.

Reader, pass on to'er waste your time
On bad biography, and bitter rhyme.
For what I am, this cumbrous clay insures,
And what I was, is no affair of yours.

A MECHANICAL PUZZLE.—A clock, the dial and hands of which appear perfectly detached from any mechanical power, has attracted much attention in the window of a clockmaker, of Cornhill. The difficulty is to understand by what means the hands are made to move, seeing that they are placed in the centre of a perfectly transparent pane of glass, and no communication with any mechanical power passes through the pane of glass. The figures denoting the hours are painted on the glass, thus rendering it obvious that the glass is stationary.

"Lubly Dina," said an African Romeo who was last evening paying his devoirs to a shiner—"lubly Dina, you says you not so beauteful as my remorantic fancify paints you;—whoy, look haw, Dina, does aint no one no where can gib the full deescription ob your unrivalled charms. Now as'at dis plain speakin'—can any ting add a polish to Massa's boots, when I give dem de finishing touch in de mornin? And as for calling you a violet and speakin of its perfume—I won't say noting about it."

Angasia's cheeks, to vermeil drest,
With tender love my heart inspired;
My lips her beauteous roses pressed,
And took off all that I admired.

This world is a prison in every respect;
In walls are the heavens in common;
The gaoler is sin; the prisoners are men,
And the letters they're known with are Women.

"It takes me to lick lasses," as the Yankee schoolmaster said when he caught the girl.

"Fare reduced," as the man said when he dined on one single cracker.

"I'm rising by degrees," as the quicksilver said to the thermometer, as it was getting hot.

CURE FOR COLDS.—Rub them well with salt every day for a week—then have both feet cut off just above the ancle.

An exchange paper says that among the various species of lying, that of lying in bed late is the common.

A man in Connecticut, recently had hard work to "shuffle off this mortal coil." In the first place he took a large quantity of laudanum—then stabbed himself in the neck—and finally effected his object by throwing himself into the river.

"What's in a name?" I'll maintain,
"Is always right, even almighty Jane;
"Ah would to heaven," cries grave Sue,
"What's right were fashionable too."

George, slowly dun'd for money due,
At once his lack of cash betray'd—
"I'll make you finish at,"—"Ah, do!
"And you shall be the first that's paid."

INTERESTING QUESTION.—At a debating club, the question was discussed, whether there is more happiness in the possession or pursuit of an object. "Mr. President," said a young orator, "suppose I was courtin' a young gal and she was far to run away, and I was to run arter her, would'nt I be appier when I catched her than when I was running arter her?"

A Boston paper says that they have a new article for breeches in that city, which they call hard times. If the article stands a pressure well, it would undoubtedly sell rapidly in our market.

WINTER COURTESY.—"Well, Sam, as I told you I was going, I went a courting t'other night. And what do you spose I got by it?"

"Why, what should you get, Peter, but some sour tomarry the prettiest girl in the community."

"No. Twant that."

"Well, what did you get?" A kiss?"

"Yes; but I mean what I got with it."

"Oh! coffee cups, I suppose; didn't you."

"Worse than that, Sam. I got the prairie itch, and what is worse yet, mother says the only way to get rid of it is to kiss some girl that hasn't got it, and curse me if I can find one.—Texas Morning Star.

Never out while you speak, as any man's throat is too narrow a channel for words to pass so and good meat to pass down at the same time.

COURAGE MEANS ANE!—The Darien (Ga.) Herald thus exhorts the young men of that town to remember to go against the Indians—"Hannibal passed the Alps; Cæsar crossed the Rubicon; Napoleon forced the bridge of Lodi; and why not the farmers and merchants of Darien cover themselves with glory by walking in the bags of Okefenokee!

THE OLD MAID'S FIRST OFFER.

I must tell you the heart-rending story—I have long wished to do so, and the time is at length arrived. (Here her voice dropped into a confidential whisper.) Poor dear Major Ozbrin, who is now dead and gone—heigh ho!—had been long showing me marked attention—in fact, paying his addresses, though he never made his declarations; when one morning, after having sung me a song of Parinelli's—ah! you should have heard the Major, he was such a sweet singer. Well, the Doctor had gone out to buy a new invented fish sauce—poor dear man! he did like to have his fish well dressed—and I remember he took Franchetta, my little beauty of a spaniel with him, so that the Major and I were all alone in the breakfast parlor, when looking benevolently in my face, he suddenly went down on one knee before me—ah! there was gallantry in those days!—and taking my hand, which he tenderly pressed, made a passionate avowal of his love. I felt myself blushing crimson, when, at this agitating moment, just as I was going to utter a palpitating confession of my partiality, my eyes began to twinkle—I felt a tingling in my nose, my mouth opened in spite of myself, and I sneezed like an explosion of gunpowder, right in his upturned and imploring face! Now, Lady Susan, you know how tremendously I always sneeze, did you ever—of all the awkward occurrences!

The Major started, as well he might, but recovered himself—so did I—he gazed at me tenderly and expectingly, and I was just about to relieve him from his suspense, when I sneezed with a second and louder explosion, that seemed to scatter the very nose from my face.

This was a confusion to me and the Major, who was still holding my imperiled hand, but looking downward, to avoid the shower bath that I was unintentionally scattering round me, he declared that he would never rise from his knee till I had pronounced his doom. I uttered a heartfelt sigh, and the soft avowal was just trembling on my tongue, when I felt something on the tip of my nose! Lady Susan—lady Susan—it was beginning to bleed!—did you ever—of all the distressing moments!

I struggled to withdraw my hand, that I might get my handkerchief, an action which the Major attributed to coyness, and therefore did but hold it more firmly. In the context, after frightfully spotting my tabinet silk gown, three very large drops of blood fell upon the Major's wrist! He started up—I closed my eyes and sunk in a chair, prone behind with confusion. Supposing I had fainted, the Major hastily seized a large tumbler of water and threw it in my face. At such an unexpected scaring, I screamed with surprise and terror. The Marescial powder which I wore—I was always famous for my powder—mingling with the water and blood, converted my face into a hideous spectacle; when, just at that moment, the door flew open, and Franchette, thinking her mistress was killed, flew at the poor dear Major, and bit a large mouthful out of his left leg, while the good horror-stricken Doctor suffered the bottle of newly invented fish sauce to fall from his hand and be smashed to pieces on the floor. Now, dearest Lady Susan! consider what must have been my feelings!—did you ever—such a scene!

From the Mercury.

OLD GRIMES'S DOG.

MESSRS FAUSTEN.—My great grandfather was not only personally acquainted with Old Grimes himself, but also had an intimate acquaintance with his dog; the memory of which I believe our present day poets have unjustly disrespected. Allow me to do something for the good old creature in the way of dogrel:

Old Grimes's dog has long been dead,
And turned again to dust;
He's had his day, with other dogs,
His christian name was Trust.

He was a kind and faithful dog,
As ever trod the ground;
His blood was crossed, as I've been told,
By mastiff, cur, and hound.

When'er he heard his master's voice,
He never failed to mind;
His tail was curtailed very much,
And stuck straight out behind.

His disposition was so mild,
As summer's mildest blue;
He did not bark at passers by,
As many puppies do.

He wore a ring about his neck,
Composed of shining brass;
And slept each night at Grimes's gate,
Nor suffered thieves to pass.

He never joined all noisy dogs,
When dog-days set them wild;
But kept away, and thus became
A dog-star, calm and mild.

But dogs are frail, as mortals are
And Trust at last ran mad,
Yet Grimes endured the dire mishap,
Although his heart was sad.

He can around the poor dog's neck
An iron safety chain,
And bound him tar into a post,
Because he was insane.

He growled and snapped, and raved and foamed,
But Grimes no fault could find;
Because, he said he'd not act so,
Had he his sober mind.

The tar that bound him fast to earth,
And also to the post,
Were soon dissolved by welcome death,
And Trust gave up the ghost.

Old Grimes, his wife, and children all,
At first were grieved, and sorry;
But afterward agreed, that Trust
Had died when in his glory. DOG.

REFLECTIONS UPON AUTUMN.

Autumn has scarcely come to pay her yearly visit, and to warn us of decay. The leaflet hangs wavering with the wind; the frost of evening now gathers upon it, and its freshness is stricken. Summer, soft eyed Summer! art thou gone? Yes—I still hear thy sweet adieu sighing low in the tall reeds, as thy faint breath steals from leaf to leaf away! But why should we mourn? The flower may fade and its fragrance die, yet there is within it the seeds of eternal renovation!

In connection with human life, we are too apt to reflect upon yellow autumn, with feelings of melancholy. It becomes a season of contemplation, and our thoughts go upward to the Author of our being, hovering like broad spirits around His holy altar.

But there is something in the fall of the year with even its mournful decay, which charms the soul and sweetens human life—the rustle of the changing green—the winds low sigh—the creaking door; the lonesome cricket's prolonged chirping—and the lit up hearth, send our thoughts back on an errand of memory, to those charming hours of happy days of youth and hope;—days of childhood—the cottage home, where with them, is believed some from whom we have now parted forever, we sat around the family altar and partook of the feelings of other times. Oh! how agreeable are those melancholy reflections, as they linger and play in the tabernacle of a virtuous heart!

If we contemplate the changes of the season, in connection with an hereafter, we feel an inexpressible beauty in the comparison, which cannot cease to convince the liberal and creative mind, that there is a home beyond the grave, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest!" It presents an argument displaying design in like all of nature's fine pencillings, so woven with an existence by the unseen hand, that the keenest eye cannot touch the point at which every separate and so parted from the whole—yet such a totality becomes an instinctive feeling, which carries the soul upward we know not how, to its destined and eternal habitation of light and life.

A complete change, without annihilation, is a concomitant of all of nature's works. She never ceases to operate. Everything which we see upon the globe has been acted upon by nature's supreme hand, but never has been destroyed; and Wood has been changed by fire to charcoal—passed from thence to various stages of refinement, until it has resulted in a concrete of as elementary light, sparkling in the hue and splendor of a diamond.

That man, whose eye has never opened upon the noiseless operations of nature—or witnessed the development of her handy work—who has never felt the charms of her spring time, or heard an unconscious sigh, while raising the autumn flower to its decline, has left unlearned the greatest lesson of his own mortality.

Why does not the steel hearted atheist, who burns his soul in an eternal sleep, realize at the difference between his fate and that of the plant! Does he not observe the pride of the forest shed, dying in leaves in the autumn—sleeping in the springs—re-clothing and replenishing through interminable ages? Surely he must, while he surveys his own decayed and nervless limbs, cry out in despair, "for me there is no return—no spring!—my withered trunk, never will clothe itself in a smoother rind! my hearty locks shall never more receive the gloss of youth!—no power and vigorous sap will circulate through these chilled and cold pond vessels!" Alas! it will not be so—what! the plant be resurrected, and the season come again, while the lord of the earth with his face upward, walking in the majesty of reason, withers and sinks to an ignoble and eternal sleep!

"Believe the more! the autumn blast of death
Kills not the buds of virtue; no—they spread
Beneath the heavenly beams of brighter suns,
Through endless ages into higher pride."

☞ We do not remember to have seen the following witty effusion, in any of our papers.

Epitaph on the Tomb-stone erected over the Marquis of Anglesea's leg, lost at the battle of Waterloo.—(Ascribed to Mr. Canning.)

Here rests—and let no saucy knave
Presume to sneer and laugh,
To learn that mouldering in the grave
Is laid—a British calf.

For he who writes these lines is sure
That those who lost the whole,
Will find such laugh was premature,
For here too lies a sole.

And here five little ones repose,
Twin born with other five,
Unheeded by their brother toes,
Who all are now alive.

A leg and foot to speak more plain.
Rest here of one commanding,
Who, though his wife he might retain,
Lost half his understanding.

And when the gout with thunder fraught,
Four bullets thick as hail,
Could only in this way be taught
To give the foe leg bail.

And now in England just as gay
As in the battle brave,
Goes to a rout, review or play
With one foot in the grave.

Fortune in vain here showed her spite,
For his will still be found,
Should England's sons engage in fight,
Resolved to stand his ground.

But Fortune's pardon I must beg,
The warrant not to disarm,
For when she lop'd the hero's leg,
She did not seek his harm.

And but indulged a harmless whim,
Since he could walk with one,
She saw two legs were lost on him
Who never meant to run.

For the Saturday Evening Post.

MY FIRST TRAVEL.

MESSRS. EDITORS.

GENTLEMEN—Having been kept at home during the greater part of my life, I determined to take a tour to the West, and seek my fortune among the wild sons of the forest. After making necessary arrangements, and bidding my ma and sisters adieu, I bounced in the stage coach which went thundering off. But notwithstanding the bustle and confusion which the arrival of the stage invariably produces, I did not forget to provide myself with some ham and biscuit for my dinner the first day. It was a cold wintry like morning; the snow was descending rapidly, and wrapping all inanimate objects "in its white mantle." The shrill notes of the driver's bugle, accompanied with the rattling of the horses' hoofs, told me that I was fast leaving the place of my nativity, and told my old associates that I should no longer join them in their youthful pursuits. After travelling about twenty miles, I began to feel somewhat hungry, and as a necessary consequence, commenced looking out for my wallet of provision. There was a clergyman in the stage, with whom I had a slight acquaintance, prompted by inherent politeness, I asked him to join me and take some dinner, to which he very readily assented; but looking up with a kind of consequential or pious air, said—"As human and dependent beings we should be grateful for all blessings received, and the only way to manifest our sense of gratitude, is to thank the great giver of all good as well in the stage as when at home around the festive board." I then of course asked him to ask a blessing. He commenced in a low, deep, but distinct tone "gracious," but unfortunately at that moment the wheels ran over a large root and bump went his head against the "standard;" the word following was expressed with an unusual degree of earnestness. He looked up (rubbing his head) with a vacant stare, not knowing, as I thought, whether to proceed with his thanksgiving or not. But he finally concluded to take up that cross, though painful, and perform the duty now doubly incumbent on him, for their "Creed is never relinquish a good cause." He commenced again, but I fancied that his head just about to come in contact with the standard again, (having to shut my eyes according to custom) and could not refrain from bursting into a hearty laugh. At this he appeared to feel quite angry as he took a seat with the driver on the box, and said he would not keep the company of such an impolite man. I was very much surprised at his getting mad at this, and resolved never to look out of the window, I said to him—"I'ret not thyself because of evil seen," which entirely counteracted the effect of the laugh, and he came and took a seat beside me, partaking of the ham and biscuit in its natural state, without a blessing. But we soon had to part as he was going to Conference or some other ecclesiastical meeting, and I was wending my way to the "Far West."

In about ten days after leaving home, I arrived safely in Ripley, a small village, situated in Tippah county, Mississippi, at the head of Wolf River. This is a flourishing little place, and a number of lively, handsome, and intelligent young ladies constitute a part of its inhabitants. I stopped at the house of an uncle who lived there, and for the first time began to associate with the ladies. I was somewhat awkward, but thought I could remedy this difficulty by "going ahead," accordingly I did so, and was very unfortunate, as the following circumstances will plainly show.

There was a riding party proposed, to which I readily agreed, and was very active in inviting the young ladies to accompany us. We soon had every thing arranged; the carriage drove up and we all bounded in, the whip cracked and we went rattling off. I thought I was the happiest fellow in the world, seated between two of the most lovely creatures on earth. I did not envy the king or his throne, though nations were at his command: but before I got back I dare say I felt as much shame and regret as Xerxes did, when the Grecians drove his soldiers from the field at Mycale. My happiness was momentary; after travelling about three miles, we came to a small stream surrounded by an extensive bogg, and about the middle of this bogg there was quite a cluster of grape vines, which were covered thickly over with grapes of the finest kind. This bogg was composed with moss in lieu of turf, and I felt as it would support our weight by stepping lightly, and we soon arrived at the spot. I wishing to appear smart, took hold of one of the vines and commenced exclaiming in real sailor style; but just as I was about to place my feet on a limb, the vine broke and down I came. Keeping my original position, I went through the moss into the small stream beneath. My head came a foot out and the balance under, and there I was "as fast as a wedge driven in an oak log." The whole company surface trembling beneath the tremendous peal of laughter which burst forth on every hand. The young men finally came laughing up, and extricated me from my unpleasant, and to me not a very pleasing predicament. I got up, my fine white hat lost their whiteness and changed to a cloudier hue. And I reckon I left that place sooner and with less ceremony than young men usually leave the company of ladies. "Taking my feet in my hand," I pattered after that in every particular, I moved with unexpanded speed without "looking back," and was to town not long afterward. I excited quite a degree of interest at my arrival in my dirty apparel, and that interest was heightened by my silence, for I was too much frightened to answer a single interrogatory; also fearing to disclose the secret, I hurried home. But soon the anxious fear which pervaded the village was dispelled by the arrival of the carriage, which took focus a day or two after and by its before dispected their fears were now stretched, and consoled at my misfortune, and I thought they were the most unfeeling people I had ever met with. It was sometime I assure you before I made my appearance in the company of those who witnessed the scene just related. Two days after the occurrence I should have chosen the habitation of demons to their community. But time in a manner begin to obsolete from my memory, my former misfortune, and I determined once more to visit the ladies, and carried this resolution into effect an evening or two before I left that country.

The ladies and gentlemen were on a walk to a very pretty little stream, which wound its clear waters about three-fourths of a mile from the village. This is a place much resorted to by the "fashionables," as the water pours over a very large rock, which looks very pretty, and by means of a vine which was suspended over the channel, you could swing from shore to shore, and drop into the water at pleasure. My former misfortune made me somewhat careful about grape vines; I remained still until the last person beside myself had swung over, then taking hold I gave a tremendous swing, but unfortunately the limb was partially broken, and at yielding to the pull sufficiently for me to strike the water, I ploughed it from shore to shore, making the foam rise before me until I came in contact with the opposite shore, there rebounding! "ashayed and ballanced off," just about the middle of the creek, and was left to use my own decision, either to swing to the vine (my feet and head at right angels, and the seat of my pantaloons under the water) or let loose and make for the shore, (the water about waist deep.) I was not wasting in decision on the occasion, for I decided in favor of letting the vine hang, and commenced sounds of laughter, which rings to my ear every time I call that mishap to memory.—And I do assure you, that was my last attempt at gallantry in that county, for "I pocked up and put out" for my native land, and here I have arrived safely, and am just about by your permission to give the world a history of my FIRST TRAVEL.

Wadesborough, N. C. October 6th, 1839.

TURKISH ABSTINENCE.

After a half hour's delay the door was once more thrown open, and an old Turk entered: he salaamed three times most reverently and motioned us to be seated, declining at the same time, by a gentle gesture of his hand, our invitation. He was followed by a train of six persons, all individually attired, and strongly by their costume and manner, the rank and importance of their chief. Conceiving that as his visit had but one object—to observe our convivial customs—we immediately resumed ourselves and filled our glasses. As one after one of the officials's household passed round the apartments, we offered them a goblet of champagne, which they gravely declined, with a polite but solemn smile—all except one, a large, savage looking Turk, with a most ferocious scowl, and the largest beard I ever saw. He did not content himself with a mere refusal of our offer, but, stopping suddenly, he raised up his hands above his head, and muttered some words in Turkish, which one of the party informed us was a very satisfactory recommendation of the whole company to Satan for their heretic abomination. The procession moved slowly round the room, and when it reached the door again retired, each member of it salaaming three times, as they had done on entering. Scarcely had they gone than we burst into a loud fit of laughter at the savage looking fellow who thought proper to excommunicate us, and were about to discuss his more than common appearance of disgust at our proceedings, when again the door opened, and a turbaned head popped in, but so altered were the features, that although seen but the moment before, none of us could believe them the same. The dark complexion—the long and bushy beard were there; but instead of the sleepy and solemn character of the oriental, with a heavy eye and a closed lip, there was a droll half-devilry in the look and partly open mouth, that made a most laughable contrast with the head dress.—Confessions of Harry Lorrequer.

The New Orleans Picayune is out against the custom of wearing finger rings breast-pins, gold chains, &c. It says:—"We have about as high an opinion of an Indian squaw who coils beads around her neck, or the good sense of an African who suspends brass rings from his nasal organ, as we have of the unalloyed fop who voluntarily enters the chain-gang, and encumbers his person with baubles. Does a chain of gold or one of diamonds, give brilliancy to the eye? Does a brooch of stained glass, the size of a carriage window, even though it be cornelian, and a tint to a blush of the cheek? or do massive rings make the fingers more tapering? The mind of a woman a superfluity of such gew gaw trinkets is abominable, and displays any thing but good taste, more particularly Republican taste. He who sets above of 6-by-4 inch breastpins, watchchains like the tiller-rope of a Mississippi steamboat, or finger rings that would enchain a Cyclopt, is in our opinion deficient of the necessary weight of brains—a man with a partially furnished attic story.

Written for the Saturday Evening Post.

MAN'S LOVE.

He who has wearily, truly loved,
Can never love again.—Mrs. Hemans.

Believe it not, ye brilliant Fair,
That his who hath a heart
With love's pure feeling burning there,
And free from guilt or art,
Can love but one on this bright sphere,
And when she fades away,
Turn on her sister seraphs here
A cold and careless eye.

No! slowly from his memory
Her image fond will fade,
And time will steel the grief away,
Which her departure made;
And he will love another then,
With that pure, perfect love
Which lives in the hearts of men,
And in the world above.

I had a friend, and by his side
There stood in youth and bloom,
A bright-souled and a lovely bride,
But to the hungry tomb—
Her pure young cheek of changing rose,
Her wild and pleasing tone,
Her fah'ring step, her mind's repose,
Told she was hastening on.

A few months passed, and she had gone
To slumber with her God,
And much he wept and sighed alone
Upon her covering sod;
And one night think who'd seen him there,
Earth's bliss to him had flown,
And all he's poor heart to come in contact with the standard again, (having to shut my eyes according to custom) and could not refrain from bursting into a hearty laugh. At this he appeared to feel quite angry as he took a seat with the driver on the box, and said he would not keep the company of such an impolite man.
I was very much surprised at his getting mad at this, and resolved never to look out of the window, I said to him—"I'ret not thyself because of evil seen," which entirely counteracted the effect of the laugh, and he came and took a seat beside me, partaking of the ham and biscuit in its natural state, without a blessing. But we soon had to part as he was going to Conference or some other ecclesiastical meeting, and I was wending my way to the "Far West."

In about ten days after leaving home, I arrived safely in Ripley, a small village, situated in Tippah county, Mississippi, at the head of Wolf River. This is a flourishing little place, and a number of lively, handsome, and intelligent young ladies constitute a part of its inhabitants. I stopped at the house of an uncle who lived there, and for the first time began to associate with the ladies. I was somewhat awkward, but thought I could remedy this difficulty by "going ahead," accordingly I did so, and was very unfortunate, as the following circumstances will plainly show.

There was a riding party proposed, to which I readily agreed, and was very active in inviting the young ladies to accompany us. We soon had every thing arranged; the carriage drove up and we all bounded in, the whip cracked and we went rattling off. I thought I was the happiest fellow in the world, seated between two of the most lovely creatures on earth.
I did not envy the king or his throne, though nations were at his command: but before I got back I dare say I felt as much shame and regret as Xerxes did, when the Grecians drove his soldiers from the field at Mycale. My happiness was momentary: after travelling about three miles, we came to a small stream surrounded by an extensive bogg, and about the middle of this bogg there was quite a cluster of grape vines, which were covered thickly over with grapes of the finest kind. This bogg was composed with moss in lieu of turf, and I felt as it would support our weight by stepping lightly, and we soon arrived at the spot. I wishing to appear smart, took hold of one of the vines and commenced exclaiming in real sailor style; but just as I was about to place my feet on a limb, the vine broke and down I came. Keeping my original position, I went through the moss into the small stream beneath. My head came a foot out and the balance under, and there I was
"as fast as a wedge driven in an oak log." The whole company surface trembling beneath the tremendous peal of laughter which burst forth on every hand. The young men finally came laughing up, and extricated me from my unpleasant, and to me not a very pleasing predicament. I got up, my fine whites had lost their whiteness and changed to a cloudier hue.
And I reckon I left that place sooner and with less ceremony than young men usually leave the company of ladies. "Taking my feet in my hand," I pattered after that in every particular, I moved with unexpanded speed without "looking back," and was to town not long afterward. I excited quite a degree of interest at my arrival in my dirty apparel, and that interest was heightened by my silence, for I was too much frightened to answer a single interrogatory; also fearing to disclose the secret, I hurried home. But soon the anxious fear which pervaded the village was dispelled by the arrival of the carriage, which took focus a day or two after and by its before dispected their fears were now stretched, and consoled at my misfortune, and I thought they were the most unfeeling people I had ever met with. It was sometime I assure you before I made my appearance in the company of those who witnessed the scene just related. Two days after the occurrence I should have chosen the habitation of demons to their community. But time in a manner begin to obsolete from my memory, my former misfortune, and I determined once more to visit the ladies, and carried this resolution into effect an evening or two before I left that country.

The ladies and gentlemen were on a walk to a very pretty little stream, which wound its clear waters about three-fourths of a mile from the village. This is a place much resorted to by the "fashionables," as the water pours over a very large rock, which looks very pretty, and by means of a vine which was suspended over the channel, you could swing from shore to shore, and drop into the water at pleasure. My former misfortune made me some what careful about grape vines; I remained still until the last person beside myself had swung over, then taking hold I gave a tremendous swing, but unfortunately the limb was partially broken, and at yielding to the pull sufficiently for me to strike the water; I ploughed it from shore to shore, making the foam rise before me until I came in contact with the opposite shore, there rebounding! "ashayed and ballanced off," just about the middle of the creek, and was left to use my own decision, either to swing to the vine (my feet and head at right angels, and the seat of my pantaloons under the water) or let loose and make for the shore, (the water about waist deep.) I was not wasting in decision on the occasion, for I decided in favor of letting the vine hang, and commenced sounds of laughter, which rings to my ear every time I call that mishap to memory.—
And I do assure you, that was my last attempt at gallantry in that county, for "I pocked up

From the London Literary Gazette.

PAINTING.

When first from heaven the King of Light
Called Beauty into birth,
He painted on the waters bright
The images of earth;
The trees in lofty glory drew
Beside the low and bending flower;
And o'er its living surface threw
Sublimity and power!

That morn unconscious Love strayed near,
She started all amazed—
Advanced, retired in bashful fear,
Then, trembling, blushing, gazed!
She moved—a form yet nobler graced
The magic waters swift did yield:
A mirrored hand stole round her waist,
And Painting stood revealed!

Thus Love, immortal Art, first found,
And sought her colors true,
From every bud and blossom round
That slumbered 'neath the dew:
Yet vain she toiled, until she brought
Her nonsuch pencil to that tide,
And deeper inspiration caught
Along the river-side.

For frail was Painting's hand and rude,
Imperfect to her will;
And Nature's awful magnitude
Frowned at her mimic skill.
But softened, mellowed in the stream,
The majesty of Nature moved,
More like the visions of a dream,
When dreams where what she loved!

Then Science, nursed by Beauty, grew,
Its mighty leaves unfurled—
Its fame-ascending branches threw
A grandeur round the world.
And mute most Poetry appear,
Dethroned and crownless stand apart,
And Sculpture seem but Death, when near Love's miracles of Art.

Far Time, who never spent an hour
As in Love's beauteous clime,
Taught her, to aid the pencil's power,
To snatch a grace from Time!
And faithful to the voice that made
His golden sands in music run,
O'er Painting Time ne'er cast a shade
But it some feeling won!

A universal language spread
Its eloquence alar—
Grand as the living Scripture read
In every burning star:
From shore to shore the marvel ran,
And every holier impulse woke;
And every passion known to man
Unrivaled Painting spoke!

All feelings, sympathies, full fraught
With truth, great Art, were thine!
Th' illuminations of all thought,
Or earthly or divine!
The fine creations of the sense
Took bodied form and life from thee,
The vision and the influence Of Present Deity!

Behold! the dreadful whirlwinds tow,
The rocks from earth are torn;
See: Jesus bleeds upon the cross,
And horror hides the morn!—
We turn again—'t is Raffaelle brings
The risen Saviour to our eyes—
Oh, for those archangelic wings
That mount Jehovah's skies!

Still may that Love whose chords are hues,
Whose language Nature finds,
In mighty influence diffuse
To charm and teach all minds!
May Painting, whose delights sublime
Exalt each land where man hath trod,
Still inspiration through all time
Seek from Creation's God!

CHARLES SWAIN.

HONEST CRITICISM.

How few writers of the present day judge of an author by his book, and how many lawyers consultations influence them when recording their opinion of his talents and the merits of his work! How little of honest criticism we have; how much censure is pronounced where the author, and not the book, is the object; and how much commendation bestowed from personal motives and private regards! How very wrong and how unjust! "Every man's work is a sacred obligation, and when he falsifies his trust, he is like a churchman, who inculcates doctrines into the unwilling ears of the congregation; or a pilot, who, through the wound he is called upon to heal. It is, moreover, a cowardly act to inflict an anonymous wound, to the object of one's dislike, or to be bitter, and shows a malevolence of feeling unworthy of a scholar, and disgraceful in a gentleman. In fact, no one with any pretensions to the latter character, would ever act in this way; and it is now rarely indeed, that any one but a pretender to literature will stoop to mend others in the sort. This feeling has been accounted for by a desire, on the part of the pseudo-critic, to bring everybody and everything down to his own level, so that if he cannot attain to the elevation he is in its dark narrow street, he dazzled by the brilliancy of their distinction, and his envious heart may not corrugate by the sight of the respect and distinction they enjoy. From whatever cause it proceeds, it presents human nature in one its worst aspects, hateful for its malignity, and ridiculous for its impotency.—N. Y. Mirror.

USEFUL WOMEN.—An exchange paper makes the following very correct remarks. "She who makes her husband and children happy—who reclaims the one from vice, and trains up the other to virtue, is much greater than ladies described in romances, and whose sole occupation is to incite admiration and shafts from the quiver from their eyes." That is our mind "exactly." She that studies to make the fireside agreeable to her husband, and attractive to her children, she that can make a good loaf of brown bread, and a good pumpkin pie—make mutton on the spinning wheel, and work at the sink—is far superior, and far more useful, than the one who can play upon the guitar, and finger the piano-forte. It is the former who deserves the name of LADY.—Nashua Gazette.

BEAUTY OF PARISIAN WOMEN.—Berlin is considered one of the cities of Germany most crowded with pretty women. The ladies are, literally speaking, fair, and peculiarly happy in the elegance of their figures. They walk with much feminine grace, and are above all measure charmed if they can afford the great sum of a Parisian bonnet, or a Parisian shawl. A letter from there says: "I and one day the accidental good fortune to see one of those belles standing opposite to the most exquisite and beautiful creation of art which adorns the picture gallery; and so equal were the rival claims, to admiration of the unknown lady and immortal beauty, that it was been difficult to decide on which to bestow the palm, had not the former, possibly imagining the comparison that could not fail to be made, been moved in consequence, to continue mute, and the victory was no longer doubtful."

"DOING UP CONSIDERABLE SLEEP."

"Away out to Missouri," they live on the primitive system. People sleep as well as eat in companies, and many of the hotels there are in fact, three or four beds in each chamber. On a cold winter's night, a weary and lost-worn traveller arrived at one of these establishments, and called for supper. After stepping into the bar-room and taking the requisite number of "drinks," he invoked the attention of the accommodating landlady with this interrogatory:

"I say, ma'am, have you got a considerable number of beds in your house?"

"Yes," answered she, "I rather reckon we have."

"How many have you about this time that ain't always engaged?"

"Well, we've one room up stairs with eleven beds in it."

"That's just right," and the traveller, "I'll take that room and engage all the beds, if you please."

The landlady, not expecting any such extravagancy for the night, thinking that her guest might wish to be alone, consented that he should occupy the room. But no sooner had the waiter retired, than a large party arrived and demanded lodgings for the night. The landlady told them, that she was very sorry—but all her rooms were engaged—true, there was one room with eleven beds in it, and only one bed.

"We must go there, then,—we must have beds, there!" The party accordingly proceeded to the chamber with the beds, and on their arrival was returned. They essayed to open the door; it was locked. They shouted aloud, but received no reply.—At last, driven to desperation, they determined upon burrowing open the door. They had no sooner done so, than they discovered every bedstead empty and all the eleven beds, piled up in the centre of the room, with the traveller sound asleep on the top. They aroused him with some difficulty, and demanded what in the world he wanted of all those beds?

"Why, look here," said he, "strangers, I aint had no sleep these here eleven nights, so I just hired eleven beds, to get round all at once and make up what I have lost. I calculate to do no considerable more of sleeping—I've hired all those beds and paid for them and, hang me, if I don't mean to have eleven nights sleep out on 'em before morning!"

THE LAST ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

If the last eruption of Vesuvius, at the beginning of this year, was of the greatest interest for the geologists as well as the artists, and had drawn even to the spot of a temple which was the temporary lodging for night, it exhibited at the same time meteorological phenomena of the greatest importance. It will, therefore not be without interest to our readers to receive a short extract from the observations of one of our natural philosophers, such as they have been communicated to him by the Royal Academy of Sciences, assembled in the Bay of Baiae.

From actual measurement, then instituted, it appears that the fissure of fire columns in the night, from the second to the third of January, with an expansion of from 4000 to 5000 feet diameter, rose to the height of 1100 feet from the brink of the crater, consequently of one-third of the whole of the mountain, while the red hot stones and masses of rock were hurled still 4000 to 5000 feet higher, which in coming down, produced a dreadful grumbling noise, and covered the whole cone. The surface of the crater burnt during these three days it fast, notwithstanding the descending lava carried along with it a great part of the ejected matter. On the other hand, the point called del Pale has lowered nine feet. The Volcanic phenomena reached, in the night, from the 3d to the 4th, an awful violence; they consisted, in half an hour's time, from 11h. 21m. to 11h. 50m. 216 electric sparks or discharges of immense extent and the greatest beauty, of the most vivid and fiery light, like lightning of a zig-zag form, without, however, causing the least thunder or other noise. They started all from the extreme point of fiery columns, or from the edge of the lava, where it flowed from the crater, and all took the same direction upward. In the nights from the 1st to the 2d, and from the 5th to the 7th, there were observed a great quantity of shooting stars, of an uncommon size and dim light, which, in an almost vertical direction, threw themselves into the flames as if attracted by a magnetical force, leaving behind them a milky streak, which was visible some time after the stars had vanished. The ejection of ashes to the south-east side was very considerable, and Torre del Annuen Zuto, as well as the whole territory for many miles in circumference, was and is still covered with two or three feet of ashes, which for a time interrupted the communication of the main road.—Translated from the German.

PHILOSOPHY.—A German Philosopher, Hegel, says, after ample experience, "Philosophy is utterly useless and truitless—and for the very reason it is the result of all pursuits, the most deserving of our attention, and the most worthy of our zeal." This definition is not equal to that given by Burton in his character of a taper tailor: "Philosophy," a cobweb, a like brandy and water—especially brandy."—Mirror.

STEPHEN GIRARD.

This remarkable person began life without a farthing, and left behind a property whose actual value amounted to seven or eight millions of dollars, and this acquired in the latter part of his life. He told himself that at the age of forty, his circumstances were so narrow that he was employed as the commander of his own sloop, engaged in the coasting trade between New York or Philadelphia and New Orleans, adding that on a certain occasion, he was forty-five days in working his way up from the Balize to the city. Few persons I believe enjoyed less personal popularity in the community in which he lived and in which he bequeathed his principle fortune. If this proceeded from defects of personal character, it is a topic which we have no occasion to discuss here.—We are authorised only to speak of the effect upon the public welfare of